SENSATIONAL SMASH-THROUGH BY CHINESE IN SHANGHAI

Foreign Military Observers Describe Japanese Situation As

GREATEST ACTION EVER FOUGHT IN CHINA ROLES REVERSED: JAPANESE HARD PRESSED AT ALL POINTS

SHANGHAI, YESTERDAY.

THE FIGHTING IN THE SHANGHAI AREA WAS RESUMED WITH RENEWED VIOLENCE TO-DAY, AND IT IS THOUGHT EXTREMELY PROBABLE THAT THE NEXT TWENTY-FOUR HOURS WILL BRING A DECISIVE RESULT EITHER WAY.

THE CHINESE AS WELL AS THE JAPANESE HAVE THROWN ALL AVAILABLE RESERVES INTO ACTION AND THE RESULT MAY WELL PROVE SENSATIONAL.

IT APPEARS THAT THE CHINESE HAVE BEEN REINFORCED TO A GREATER EXTENT THAN THE JAPANESE, AND THEY ARE REPORTED TO HAVE BROKEN THROUGH ON THE LIUHO-LOTIEN-WOOSUNG FRONT AT SEVERAL POINTS.

THE CHINESE TROOPS HAVE ALSO SCORED SOME NOTABLE SUCCESSES ON OTHER SECTORS OF THE FRONT, NOTABLY IN POOTUNG, WHERE THEY HAVE BROKEN THROUGH THE JAPANESE LINE.

TWO HUNDRED KILLED IN KWANGTUNG AIR RAID

Canton, Yesterday.
The official report of the bombing last Tuesday, when six Japanese planes visited Canton, was given to Reuters by a spokesman of the Kwangtung Provincial Government to-day.

Three of the invading machines went to Shinkwan, an important junction on the Canton-Hankow Railway.

Five bombs were dropped in the most densely populated district and, according to reports from various hospitals there which attended the victims, the number of killed and wounded aggregated over 200.

The number of buildings damaged by the bombing in various parts of the city is estimated at over ninety.—Reuters.

MARIST PRIESTS LIBERATED BY BANDITS

Peiping, Yesterday.
Some of the Catholic priests and lay brothers of the Marist Order who were kidnapped by bandits after an attack on their convent near Peiping on Monday last, have now been liberated after intervention by the French Embassy.

Ten of them, however, are still in captivity.

According to the released ecclesiastics the convent was attacked by a band of from 150 to 200 well-armed convicts who had escaped from the penal establishment in Peiping.—Trans-Ocean.

Foreign military observers in Shanghai point out that the Japanese troops may soon be in an extremely precarious situation, as they are holding a widely-scattered front, extending over 40 kilometres, which is proving exceedingly vulnerable.

If the Chinese score further successes, they say, it is more than probable that the entire Japanese forces will be rolled back to their ships.

Foreign observers also state that the present battle in the Shanghai area is probably the greatest action ever fought on Chinese soil, with both sides utilising the most up-to-date implements of war on a very large scale.

All observers agree that the wonderful Chinese resistance has given the Japanese a severe shock.—Trans-Ocean.

JAPANESE IN RETREAT

Shanghai, Yesterday.

The Japanese troops are being slowly but steadily driven back on all fronts by the Central Army forces, who have been strongly reinforced during the last 48 hours.

Reports coming in from the "war zones" indicate that the Japanese have suffered heavy losses in both men and arms.

Severe fighting is still continuing. The Chinese launched attack after attack and as a result the forces which captured Woosung village a few days ago were forced to retreat. The Chinese claim that they have driven the Japanese to the bank of the river, and have captured a number of guns.

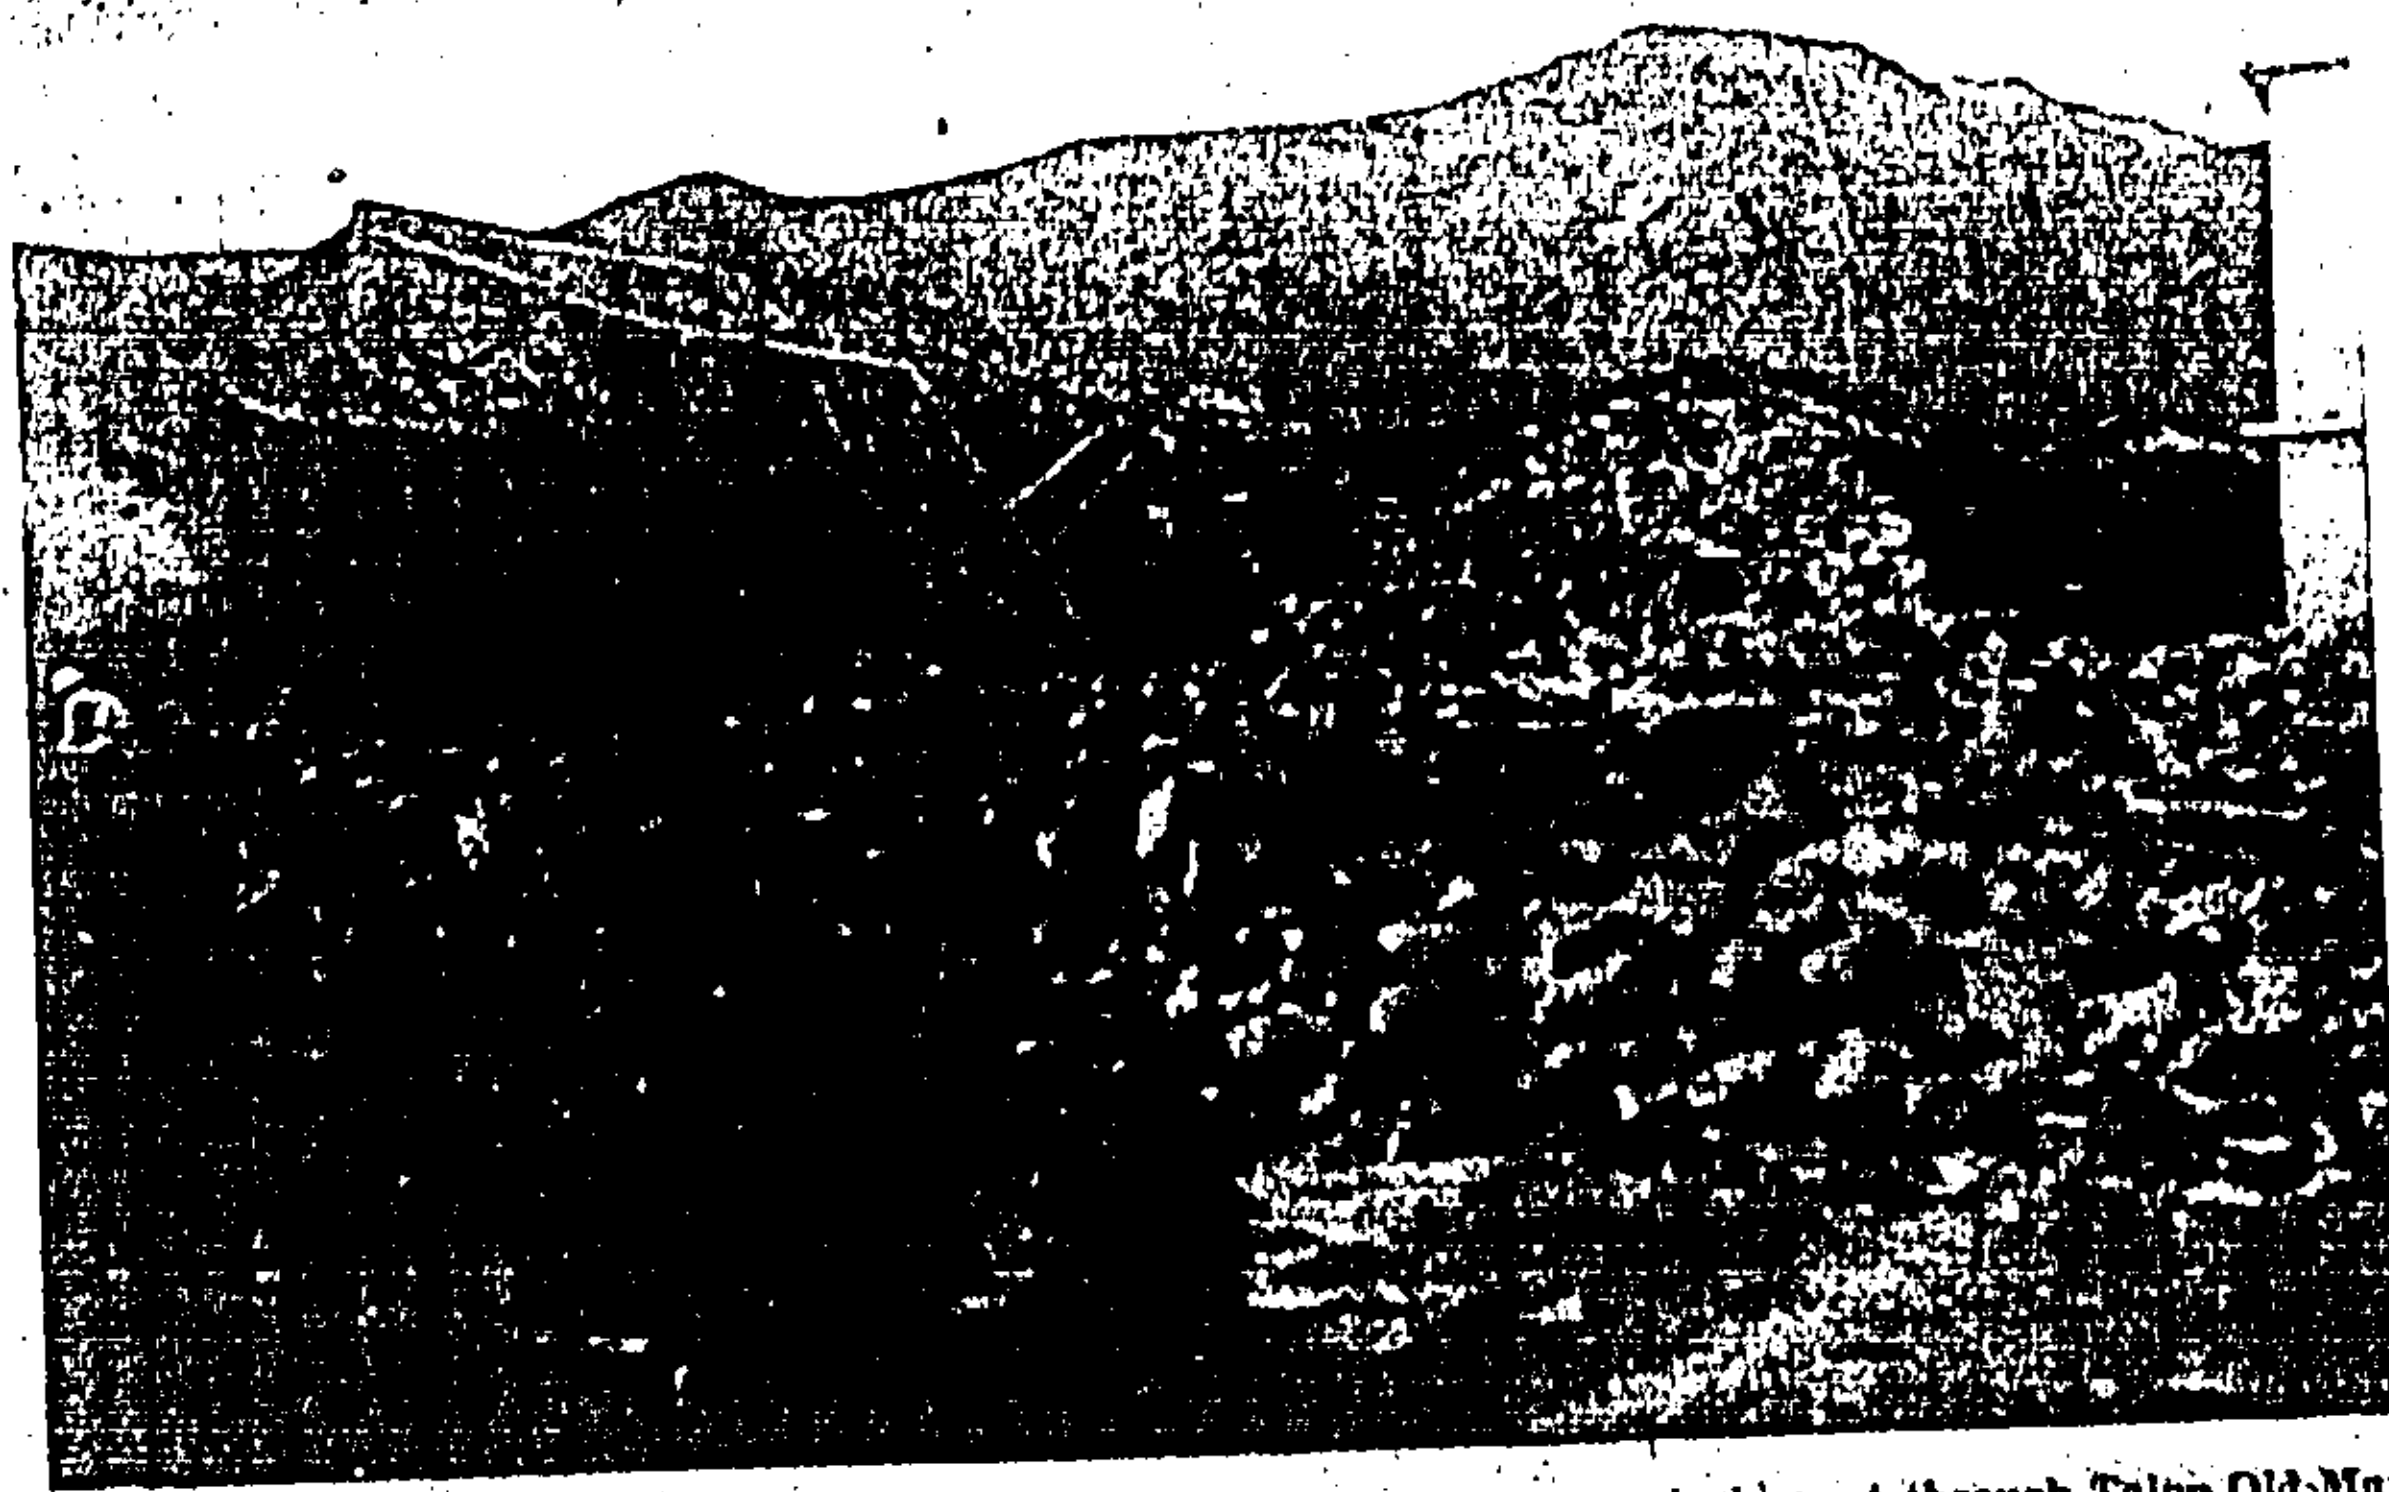

The Chinese attempt to re-capture Lotien was stopped by machine-gun fire. The battle is still on. The Chinese are gradually driving in the flanks and encircling the defenders of Lotien.—Our Own Correspondent.

TRYING TO STEM THE TIDE

Shanghai, Yesterday.

The activity of Japanese bombers in the Shanghai area and the Woosung peninsula were House converted into heap of rubble after a 30-foot tidal wave had swept through Taiipo Old Market during the typhoon. Other pictures and a first-hand account of the most tragic episode of the storm will be found in other pages.

Heavy Casualties In Settlement

Joint Anglo-American-French Protest Lodged

Shanghai, Yesterday.

The heavy civilian casualties in the foreign areas from bursting shells during yesterday's battle, has occasioned a communication from the British, French and United States Consuls-General to the Chinese and Japanese authorities.

The Chinese have been requested to withdraw their troops stationed in Pootung opposite the Bund, French Bund and Chinese Bund to a line about a mile inland. The matter has been referred to Nanking.

The Japanese have been requested to move their warships to a line about a mile down river from Soochow Creek.—Reuters.

RAIDER SHOT DOWN IN CHAPEL ATTACK

Shanghai, Yesterday.

One of the nine Japanese planes participating in this morning's raid on the North Station was hit by Chinese machine-guns and crashed in flames, exploding with a terrific detonation.

The Japanese planes flew in a northern direction in the course of the bombing operations, beginning to power dive from an altitude almost directly over Nanking Road.

They thus violated the Japanese pledge that no bomb-carrying planes would fly over the Settlement.

In addition to Messrs. Nichols and M. Doyle, British members of the Shanghai Volunteer Corps, six grooms were slightly wounded by Chinese machine-gun bullets aimed at the Japanese planes and which fell on the Race Course in Bubbling Well Road.—Reuters.

ULSTERS DROP

The Ulsters, seeing it coming, dropped flat on their faces and hoped for the best. Luckily none of them was injured, though shops all round were wrecked and the blockhouse damaged. The pillbox was immediately vacated.

Shortly after the explosion a Japanese officer ran to the scene and anxiously inquired about the safety of the British troops, repeating "So sorry."—Reuters.

BRITISH ACTION URGED

London, Yesterday.

The executive of the India League have sent a resolution to the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Anthony Eden, appealing to the Government to "fully respect its obligations under international law, specific treaties and the League Covenant, which guarantee to China the independence of her people and the integrity of her territory".

Another resolution sent to the Japanese Ambassador "protests against the wanton aggression by Japan against the people of China, and the violation of her territory, resulting in the great cruelty and suffering now being inflicted on the Chinese people in total disregard of international law and morality."—Reuters.

BRITAIN AT WAR WITH JAPAN

—SAYS MAINICHI

Tokyo, Yesterday.

"The present war is not between China and Japan but between Japan and Great Britain."

This sensational statement forms part of a leading article in the Osaka "Mainichi" to-day on the Sino-Japanese conflict.

"Britain," continues the article, "is encouraging China in carrying out resistance to Japan."

"Japan must find elbow room for its population and be assured of a market for its goods in a nearby country."

"If our neighbours are willing to grant Japan's requirements, Japan is ready to reciprocate, but if our neighbours refuse privileges, Japan will rise and fight for its survival."—Reuters.

EMPEROR'S SPEECH

Tokyo, Yesterday.

The Emperor of Japan, in a speech inaugurating the new session of the Diet to-day, said that Japan's efforts to stabilise the situation in East Asia and settlement of the incidents in China had failed owing to wanton provocation by the Chinese.

His Majesty paid a tribute to the bravery and fighting ability of the Japanese troops.—Reuters.

lation of her territory, resulting in the great cruelty and suffering now being inflicted on the Chinese people in total disregard of international law and morality."—Reuters.

MAUD DAWSON'S GOSSIP

No Age Limit To Happiness

It should be a crime to grow old. After all it is a pretty common fate, and one's likes and dislikes can't become any less precious as one's hair grows gray and a spectacle case takes the place of a vanity case.

Yet, in England at any rate, old people are subjected of individuality, and almost the same lack of liberty imposed upon prisoners.

These facts have been revealed very vividly in a newly published booklet, "Housing the Infirm," by Miss Olive Matthews.

Now Miss Matthews knows her subject. She has investigated and written fairly extensively on this subject of housing older people.

Class 1 Women

She notes that in some institutions the official allowance of liberty days is one or two days a week, or even once a fortnight, that rooms are frequently distinguished by names instead of numbers, having enamel plates on the doors grimly announcing, "Class 1 Women" or "Class 2 Women." She notes the depressing effect of set uniform, segregation and rigid menus.

We are so ready to point the finger of criticism at regimentation in other countries, believing that we are more or less free from this unpleasant form of suppression.

But if regimentation of the young is the most dangerous form, surely this suppression of the old is the most cruel.

It has no excuse, no sinister motive. It is just plain lack of imagination and lack of initiative.

Here is another woman who has investigated the problem very thoroughly.

She is Mrs. C. Isabel Hillyer, a member of the Executive of the National Council of Women, and this is what she says: "Our Poor Law Institutions have been changed in name, but in broad outline they remain as deterrent as when first established 300 years ago."

—And An Aspidistra

Mrs. Hillyer has an alternative scheme. She suggests that free accommodation of the right kind is a better solution than rent money, which often goes to maintain thoroughly unsuitable accommodation, and rents to raise rents, and declares that it would be more economical.

The present old peoples quarters in many institutions could be changed into one-roomed dwellings by turning out State-owned furniture and allowing people to take in their own "bits of things," which make all the difference between a home and a place in which you exist, she suggests.

At a recent building exhibition Mrs. Hillyer showed me model rooms planned and furnished on these lines.

They were delightful, simple, labour-saving, modern in design, yet furnished with a few genuine treasures, lent for the occasion—a patchwork rug, an old picture, yes, and an aspidistra—which gave the whole place a really "homey" touch.

Mrs. Hillyer has worked out her scheme in some detail, and claims that, so far from proving an extravagance, it would result in a saving of money.

No "Master" Here

She has visited pensioners' homes in Scandinavia. In Oslo, a chocolate factory has been converted on some such lines. A kindly "elster" is responsible for supervision. The words "Master" and "Discipline" must be maintained, do not enter into the scheme of things.

In Copenhagen, the pensioners of a beautiful home, visited by Mrs. Hillyer, were dancing to the music of a gramophone under the trees, and the "English visitor" was herself invited to "take a turn" by a sprightly old soul of 80.

CAMI-KNICKERS
No. 126.
PETTICOAT
No. 127

Whatever the silhouette of the moment, your foundation garments must be sleek and slim, if the frock over them is to achieve its effect.

Here is a grand little lingerie set, cami-knickers and petticoat.

Sauce For The Goose

Others were proud to show their own vegetable and flower gardens, and, above all, the treasured possessions in their little private rooms, the seclusion of which was always respected.

For goodness sake don't let us insist on putting an age limit to personality or happiness. Can you imagine Mr. Bernard Shaw or Mrs. Despard being turned into ciphers? And even lesser lights have their quota to contribute, their rights to preserve.

I well remember days spent at a boarding school in my youth, the irksomeness of uniform, the intolerable stupidity of petty supervision and routine "crocodile" walks.

Suppression must be infinitely more intolerable and hurtful to dignity in later years.

PIGTAIL HATS AND SHORT SKIRTS

By Our Paris Correspondent

DON'T be "panicked" by the people who tell you about the sweeping fashion changes and new silhouettes; they are not so sweeping or new as all that. A little attention to detail will soon bring you right bang up-to-date.

Take the first figure I have sketched you, wearing a little afternoon dress by Marcel Rochas. The frock is in black with white double pointed collar, and the original scarf and sash are in pale blue.

Points to note here are the wrist-length plain sleeves (no more short "puffs") and the sash. Sashes are everywhere, often in gaily contrasting colours like the example in sketch 5, which is in bright pink and green velvet.

And please take a look at the new coliffour—very childish and fluffy in place of all the tight curls, flat curls and rolls we have been used to.

Sketch in the right-hand corner—believe it or not—is a miff in quilted red and green velvet decorated with fox fur. In sketch 2 you see how a knot of white and gold-lame brocade may transform a navy suit.

The hat-plus-pigtails idea is quaint, but distinctly becoming. That goes, too, for the headress in sketch 1 composed of ribbon loops and tulle. The Scottish honnet looks very gay.

For the rest skirts are short—midway between calf and knee, no more—and plain. Chanel favours the three-gored skirt with mid-front seam and panel back. She makes much play in this style with checks and stripes.

Evening skirts are mostly ground length and no train.

High lights in the collections are the sashes I have mentioned, flowers in profusion, ribbons, feathers and sequins for hair ornaments, capes in varying length for day and evening, often with encrustation in contrasting colours or materials on the shoulders.

Collars and pockets are important, shoulders squared, but not too aggressively so.

WHY YOU SHOULD JOIN THE LEAGUE OF HEALTH AND BEAUTY

BECAUSE:

Health is the intimate concern of every individual and of all nations. Interpreted in its highest sense, it is the embodiment of Christian principles, the first essential to harmonious and efficient living, the key to freedom for the personality, the point towards which all human desires could be influenced to converge.

BECAUSE:

While many organisations have been brought into existence to further the cause of health, and many others to further the cause of peace, the League is the only one which knits these aims together, believing that when health is finally established peace must follow. Its immediate aim is Racial Health—its ultimate aim is Peace.

BECAUSE:

It brings within the reach of working girls and busy women (at prices within their means) expert teaching in health exercises, and it offers to them opportunity for daily action in a worthwhile cause and for the unlimited happiness of comradeship.

BECAUSE:

It aims at the development of spirit, mind and body, and this, when accomplished, releases powers of expression latent in every individual, but often atrophied by lack of the confidence that "physical efficiency" gives. London's big demonstrations are evidence of what talent and love of beauty can be "drawn out" by careful and sympathetic training.

BECAUSE:

It is solely dependent for its finances on members' subscriptions and class fees, and needs NUMBERS if its indisputably useful work is to continue.

Three Costly Japanese Landing Attempts Collapse

FLARE-UP IN TIENSIN AREA

Tientsin, Yesterday.
The arrival of Chinese reinforcements has led to another flare up in the fighting along the Tientsin-Pukow railway, although the district south and west of Tientsin is flooded as a consequence of heavy rains which have been falling without ceasing for several days.
According to reports in Tientsin, the Japanese intend landing 60,000 more troops shortly in the Tientsin sector.—Trans-Ocean.

TERRORISM REIGNS IN HOLY LAND

An attempt was made this morning to assassinate a wealthy Arab member of the National Defence Party while he was standing on the steps of his house.

The assassin, a man in Arab clothes, seriously injured his victim.
In Jerusalem, an Arab woman was killed and another wounded, and a British constable who was acting as escort slightly wounded, when a bomb was thrown at an Arab bus in the centre of the town this morning.

The constable fired at the assassin, whom he described as a Jew, but the latter escaped.

The British High Commissioner to Palestine, General Sir Arthur Wauchope, left this morning by Imperial Airways plane for Egypt. He later sailed from Port Said for England on a two months holiday.—Reuter.

Tokyo, Yesterday.
Sir Robert Clive, the British Ambassador, arrived here this afternoon from Yokohama where he had disembarked from the Empress of Russia earlier in the day.

Interviewed by press representatives, Sir Robert declined to comment on the North China situation. He remarked, however, that he would add his endeavours to those seeking an improvement of Sino-Japanese relations.—Our Own Correspondent.

Perfect Coordination Of Chinese Arms Praised

London, Yesterday.
Foreign military experts in Shanghai are greatly impressed by the courage displayed by the Chinese troops in action against the Japanese, and also by the perfect co-operation shown by the various arms of the Chinese Army, says the Shanghai correspondent of "The Times."

Western military experts consider that the Chinese scored a remarkable initial success in bringing the first large-scale Japanese attack to a virtual standstill.

The experts point out that the Chinese troops are far better than they were five years ago.

It is the opinion in Shanghai, says the correspondent, (writing before the large-scale counter-attack that has met with such spectacular success) that the Chinese forces will be considerably reinforced in the near future, since the Chinese General Staff is determined to hold its positions outside Shanghai under all circumstances in order to prevent the Japanese advancing into the interior of the country.

The correspondent reports that further Japanese reinforcements have been thrown ashore at Luhoh and the Lion Forest Forts.—Trans-Ocean.

DESPERATE EFFORT

Collapse Of Attacks On Pootung

Shanghai, Yesterday.
Chinese forces entrenched over a wide area along the Pootung front facing the International Settlement, inflicted heavy casualties on the Japanese regulars who made three desperate but unsuccessful attempts to land at Pootung.
A Chinese military official announces that the Japanese have been entirely repulsed on the Pootung side with heavy losses on the landing parties as well as damage to the fleet of warships in the river which were shelled by Chinese artillery.

CASUALTIES IN THE SETTLEMENT

Shanghai, Yesterday.

Two Chinese were killed and 51 injured in the International Settlement and French Concession this morning.

Most of the casualties were caused by machine-gun bullets and shells fired against the Japanese bombers which raided the North Station sector.—Reuter.

APOLOGY TO THE ULSTERS

Shanghai, Yesterday.

An apology was delivered by the Japanese to the Royal Ulster Rifles to-day after a blockhouse occupied by a detachment of the battalion had been hit by fragments of a Japanese bomb.

Three bombs landed near the blockhouse, which is on the border of the Settlement opposite North Station, in the course of an air raid by nine Japanese planes. The pill-box was sprayed by bomb fragments but the structure was only very slightly damaged and there were no casualties.

U.S. MARINES ALSO

After the raid was over, a Japanese officer from the Japanese lines nearby called and apologized to the Ulsters occupying the post. Another ten bombs were dropped within 200 to 250 yards of the headquarters of the 3rd Battalion of the 4th United States Marines, which is less than a mile from the Markham Road rail junction.—Reuter.

AN APOLOGY BY REAR-ADMIRAL

Shanghai, Yesterday.
On behalf of the Japanese Navy, Rear-Admiral Sugiyama to-day called on H.M.S. Danae, to which the British Commander-in-Chief, Admiral Sir Charles Little, has transferred his flag.

Admiral Sugiyama expressed regret that bombs from Japanese planes raiding North Station this morning had landed so close to the pill-box manned by men of the Royal Ulster Rifles, and enquired if any damage had been done and whether any British troops were injured.—Reuter.

TUNG WAH SALE OF FLOWERS

The sale of flowers organised yesterday by the Tung Wah Hospital in aid of the hospital fund and the Chinese refugees from Shanghai resulted in over $5,000 being collected by Chinese girls, students and nurses.

JAPANESE AIR AND SEA ATTACK ON AMOY

Amoy, Yesterday.

Bombs and big guns shattered the peace in this city yesterday when three Japanese warships and bombing planes, suddenly and without warning opened a bombardment which continued throughout the day, with but short intervals between the alternating rain of explosives from the sea and from the air.

Early in the morning, three Japanese warships sailed into the harbour and suddenly released a salvo of gunfire on the forts around the city.

The Chinese forts returned the fire with deadly effect, concentrating on one of the ships which was so badly disabled that it had to be towed out of the harbour by its companion ships.

At about 9 o'clock in the morning 2 Japanese planes appeared over the city and released bombs at various places, but no objects of importance were hit. One woman was injured by bomb fragments.

Gloucester Road Scene

Robert Robinson, a seaman of the President Grant, was yesterday charged before Mr. Schofield at the Central Magistracy, with behaving in a disorderly manner in Gloucester Road on Friday and with resisting arrest.

He was fined $125 and ordered to pay $25 compensation to Sui Muk who was injured.

Defendant was seen by Sergeant Matches in Gloucester Road surrounded by a large crowd. He was trying to push his way out and was under the influence of drink. When arrested, it took four Indian constables to take him to the station as he struggled all the way.

Sze Mui, a painter, said he was walking on the pavement in Gloucester Road when defendant came up and pushed him against a pillar injuring the side of his face and cutting it badly. He was dazed and when he came to, saw defendant struggling with the Police. In hospital, he had three stitches put in.

E. R. Waybright, another Grant seaman, also charged with disorderly conduct and assault, was fined $50 and ordered to pay the complainant $5 compensation.

LABOUR PARTY DEMANDS BRITAIN PLAY HER PART IN COLLECTIVE SECURITY

London, Yesterday.

A declaration that the British Government must be "strongly equipped to defend this country, to play a full part in collective security and to resist any intimidation by the Fascist Powers," is made in the Report on International Policy and Defence issued by the National Council of Labour, representing the General Council of the Trades Union Congress, the Labour Party and Parliamentary Labour Party.

The Report outlines a twofold policy for peace.

It proposes that the Powers entertaining grievances should be invited to state their case, and should be offered through the League of Nations, a new system of political security and economic opportunity, which would banish from international relations both the fear of war and all legitimate economic grievances.

The new system must form part of a general settlement which will relax the present international tension and hold out prospects of enduring peace.

ARMED FORCE

The other part of the policy requires that through the League of Nations, aggressors should be confronted with an emphatic superiority of armed force.

The Report alleges that only Germany, Italy and Japan seriously threaten peace at present, and envisages the possibility that the trio may form an alliance.

REARMAMENT POLICY
The Report declares that in the event of Labour coming to power, the Government would be unable to reverse the present programme of rearmament until the change in the international situation entailed by the advent of a Labour Government had had effect.—Reuter.

An Unkind Destiny stalked a member of the men's refugee camp at Sham Shui Po during the typhoon. He was Mr. M. A. Radick, British teacher of the Cathedral School at Shanghai.

He had not been too comfortable here and had embarked on the s.s. Kwangchow some ten minutes before she sailed. The ship was stranded on Lamma Island.

Members of the Refugee Camp saw a somewhat forlorn figure trudging back at 6 p.m. on Thursday, and Mr. Radick hove in sight for another stay of indefinite duration.

STERN FIRST THROUGH CAPSUIMUN PASS

THOUGHT GREAT PRAYA FIRE WAS BEACON FOR GUIDANCE OF MARINERS

Engines full ahead, ship going full astern, and travelling from Kowloon Bay to Castle Peak in that fashion — such was the story of a miraculous escape from being battered to pieces on the shores of the Colony by the s.s. Nagara during the typhoon, related by the vessel's master, Captain S. Holberg, to a "Sunday Herald" representative yesterday afternoon.

Crediting his escape to sheer luck and some "unknown force" Captain Holberg gave a vivid description of how the vessel, drifting stern first, escaped colliding with a ship in the harbour, going ashore at West Point, going aground at Kap Sing Light-house, and of how she drifted safely through the narrow and treacherous Capsuimun Pass, without lights and navigating instruments.

"At 3 a.m.," stated Captain Holberg, "the chain of our anchor snapped. At once we were caught up in the gale and drifted towards West Point in spite of the fact that our engines were working. We were almost ashore before the order 'full steam ahead' could be complied with."

"As we swept down harbour, we saw the fire at West Point. The Chief Officer took this to be a beacon lit to help us find our bearings."

"With full steam, we gradually made progress in an attempt to return to our moorings, but the gale increased in velocity and we again drifted helplessly in the harbour."

SHIPS THAT PASS

"We narrowly missed colliding with a ship which, owing to the weather and darkness, I could not recognise. The space which divided us was less than a yard. It was really luck which favoured us, otherwise we would have suffered the same fate as the ships which are aground or under water."

Captain Holberg went on to describe how his vessel continued to drift, stern first, before the gale. "Being well acquainted with the harbour I managed to 'feel' my way as the ship was carried relentlessly by the wind," he said, "and fortunately kept the ship a safe distance from the shore."

KAP SING ESCAPE

"We drifted away from the harbour towards Capsuimun, and near the Kap Sing Light-house, we again had a very narrow escape from going aground."

"How we managed to get through Capsuimun Pass with the ship going stern first, I cannot explain, but we did, and without mishap. The bridge deck had already been blown away and the compasses and a number of important navigating instruments had been damaged, so we did not know where we were. Nor could we communicate with any boat or place as our wireless apparatus had been damaged by the typhoon."

AT CASTLE PEAK

"Safely through, we drifted towards Castle Peak Bay where the weather was a little calmer, and there from 4.15 a.m. onwards we steamed to and fro as we could not find our bearings. It was not until 7.30 a.m. that we dropped anchor and at noon we returned to our original mooring in the harbour."

"With the exception of the collapse of the bridge, the damage to navigating instruments, some rigging, and four large ventilators blown away, the Nagara suffered very little damage."

TRIBUTE TO CREW

"There is a tribute I must pay," added Captain Holberg, "and that is to the gallant way in which my crew handled the ship throughout her miraculous voyage. Some of the crew were ashore and those on board totalled only 25."

"They, especially Chief Officer K. Lohman, Second Officer E. Wistedt and Third Officer R. Stromborg, are indeed to be commended for their excellent work during the gale."

THE TYMERIC

Salvage work on the s.s. Tymoric which is hard aground at North Point near the Takoo Sugar Refinery Factory, has already begun, and it is expected to refloat the vessel by to-morrow morning.

TYPHOON DAMAGE AT SWATOW

Swatow, Yesterday. The typhoon which hit this city and its surrounding regions, wreaked heavy damage in the Hainan and Wuhua districts, according to reports reaching here.

Hundreds of residences in these areas were totally destroyed by the terrific storm.

In the heavy rains that accompanied the typhoon, many bridges and highways were washed away, seriously disrupting land transportation in the vicinity of Swatow.—Central News.

Seven British Ships Locked Up In Gijon

LONDON, YESTERDAY. SEVEN BRITISH STEAMERS ARE NOW DETAINED IN THE SPANISH REPUBLICAN PORT OF GIJON IN CONSEQUENCE OF THE BLOCKADE OF THE HARBOUR BY THE NATIONALIST CRUISER ALMIRANTE CERVERA AND TWO MINELAYERS.

This is the information in despatches received in London, which add that the British ships have numerous refugees on board.

Meanwhile, the commander of the Spanish Government destroyer Jose Luis Diaz, which arrived at Falmouth a few days ago in a damaged condition, has, it is stated, been requested by Britain to speed up the necessary repairs and leave British territorial waters as soon as possible.

The commander has been further requested to inform the authorities how long it will take to carry out repairs.—Trans-Ocean.

SEVEN GEORGIANS SENTENCED

Moscow, Yesterday. Proceedings which have been going on for some time against Bolshevik leaders in Georgia, who were charged with sabotage, culminated yesterday when seven sentences of death were passed.

The seven accused have already been executed by firing squad. Other sentences, of imprisonment, ranging from eight to ten years, were also passed.—Trans-Ocean.

HOME FLEET SAILS FOR INVERGORDON

London, Yesterday. Ships of the Home Fleet stationed at Portsmouth, including H.M.S. Rodney, the flagship, have left for Invergordon for their Autumn exercises in Scottish waters.

The flag of the Commander-in-Chief of the Home Fleet, Admiral Sir Roger Backhouse, was transferred from the Nelson, which is refitting, to the Rodney this morning.

The aircraft-carrier, Courageous, with her attendant destroyer, H.M.S. Crusader, the escort vessel Fleetwood, and the destroyer, Blanche, were among the vessels which sailed.

The destroyers, Forester and Fury which were to have accompanied the fleet had their orders cancelled as the result of the decision to reinforce the destroyer strength in the Mediterranean Sea. They are proceeding with H.M.S. Fortune and Firedrake. The aircraft-carrier, Furious, attended by the Destroyer, Stronghold, will sail for Scotland on Thursday next.—British Wireless.

AMERICA AND THE SUBMARINES

Washington, Yesterday.

The commanders of ships of the United States European squadron are ready to retaliate with death charges and gunfire if attacked by mysterious submarines or other vessels in the Mediterranean.

So declared a spokesman of the Navy Department today.

The spokesman added, however, that the United States is a "disinterested neutral," and does not expect to be involved in such incidents, since United States ships in the Mediterranean have been ordered to remain in port unless they are out upon some specific mission.—Reuter.

REBELS PASS DEATH PENALTY ON U.S. AIRMAN

San Sebastian, Yesterday. Sentence of death was pronounced on a captured American airman, Harold Dahls, by the Nationalist military court here yesterday.

Dahls, who had joined the Republican flying force as a volunteer, declared that he had received a false passport from the Spanish Embassy in Mexico City and had proceeded with it to Valencia.

He stated that five Americans had joined the Government air force but three of them had left after a time and returned to the United States.

MAY BE EXCHANGED

The death sentence has not yet been carried out and it is stated in informed quarters that Dahls

Huge Scale German Army Manoeuvres

BERLIN, YESTERDAY. IT IS ANNOUNCED THAT IMPORTANT AUTUMN MANOEUVRES OF THE GERMAN DEFENCE FORCES WILL TAKE PLACE WITHIN THE NEXT FEW WEEKS, MAINLY IN POMERANIA AND MECKLENBURG AND ALSO IN THE BALTIC SEA.

It is stressed here that whereas military exercises on a large scale have not taken place at all, and manoeuvres within the limit of a few army corps only once—in the autumn of last year—since the beginning of the reconstruction of the new German defence forces, the autumn manoeuvres this year will attain the proportions of "manoeuvres of the total defence forces."

FIGHTING VALUE

In an article in the periodical "Die Wehrmacht," Colonel Jost, of the War Ministry, points out that the fact that manoeuvres on such a scale are now contemplated, proves the great progress made by the new German army in adapting her armaments to those of other Powers, and also the increase in fighting value of the defence forces themselves.

The forthcoming manoeuvres, according to Colonel Jost, are necessary in order to test the homogeneous leadership of the forces, as well as their co-operation in action, and also the possibilities of the air force in particular.

NO SIGNIFICANCE

Necessity for such a test explains the choice of scene of the manoeuvres, which will be directed by Field-Marshal von Blomberg, the Defence Minister, in person, and in which numerous army divisions and several naval and air squadrons will participate.

Simultaneously with the manoeuvres, air attacks and anti-aircraft exercises will be carried out in towns and regions far away from the scene of the manoeuvres.

Colonel Jost concludes by emphasising that the manoeuvres conceal no political tendency of any kind susceptible of giving umbrage to neighbouring States.—Trans-Ocean.

BELGIAN MID-AIR COLLISION

Brussels, Yesterday. Two Belgian air force officers were killed yesterday when two military planes collided in mid-air while carrying out manoeuvres.

One of the dead men was an officer on the reserve and the other an observer. The other members of the crews saved themselves by bailing out by parachute.—Trans-Ocean.

GEN. CROZIER'S BOOK CAUSES FURORE

Lisbon, Yesterday. An unusual case of a Government offering an apology for statements made about dead men, occurred yesterday when the British Ambassador, Sir Charles Wingfield, expressed on behalf of the British Government regrets over declarations made in the recently published book "Men That I Killed," by Brigadier-General Crozier.

The passage in question concerned the order given to fire on fleeing Portuguese troops during the Great War by General Crozier.

The book aroused general protest when it appeared in Lisbon.—Trans-Ocean.

ANTI-JAPANESE MEASURE REPORTED DECIDED UPON

"Japanese goods are to be boycotted as from September 9, 1937," is alleged to be the gist of one of the resolutions passed by a representative body of local Chinese business men, who have been holding secret meetings recently.

The movement towards a boycott of Japanese goods, which began shortly after the outbreak of hostilities between China and Japan in North China, has been steadily growing, and it is estimated that local Chinese dealing in Japanese goods have cancelled orders amounting to over $2,000,000, thus bringing the import business of Japanese firms practically to a standstill.

MORE JAPANESE LEAVING COLONY

Many Japanese shops at Wan-chai have closed down, owing to their fear of the attitude of Chinese in the vicinity.

All Japanese residents have been advised by the authorities to concentrate "in a certain neighbourhood" to facilitate protection measures.

Over 200 Japanese, mostly women and children will board the s.s. Canton Maru which sails for Formosa and Japan today.

Among the passengers are business men who have decided to close down in the Colony and return home.

"AUTONOMOUS" GOVERNMENT IN CHAHAR

Tokyo, Yesterday. An autonomous Government has been formed at Kalgan, according to reports appearing in the Japanese press.

The new Government will undertake to establish law and order in Chahar "which is now completely occupied by Japanese troops."

The new Chahar Government will have Japanese advisers in all domains following the precedent set up in the creation of Manchukuo.—Trans-Ocean.

EUROPEAN WOMAN FOOD HOARDER

Says "The Andrian":—The outbreak of war always produces some amazing people strangerest of which appears to be the food-hoarder. We have heard of one European woman who went off and bought over $1,000 worth of grocery after hearing of the bombing in Shanghai!

Apart from the rank selfishness of such an act and the appalling lack of public spirit, we may well wonder whether such people realise the problems they set the government at such a time and how, in the long run, they defeat their own ends. It has often been said that people's real characters are usually revealed in a crisis. The food-hoarder's is certainly revealed in this.

Woman Found Dead

A 70-year-old Chinese woman was found dead in her hut at Lok-machau, New Territories, on Thursday. Deceased's daughter-in-law has been detained.

PERSONALIA

Hats are tricky things. We had the truth of this demonstrated to us by a woman on the ferry. She was wearing a delicate impertinence in black straw, shaped like an inverted soup plate, which appeared to be glued to the back of her head—at least we couldn't spot the connecting elastic. In some mysterious way it lent her a gamine charm, which we and several other gentlemen, judging by the way they kept their eyes riveted, found wholly irresistible. We write lent, because halfway across she removed her hat and became like all the other women sitting around.

A little indignant at such duplicity, we consulted a Mrs. Pearce who, in partnership with her mother, owns a local hat shop. Tall, slim, with nut brown hair, and very unlike the chalky complexioned, scarlet-lipped viron who snubbed us in Selfridge's one day, Mrs. Pearce listened to our tale and agreed that we hadn't exaggerated. "Hats," she informed us in a musical voice, "are the most important items in a woman's wardrobe; they either make or mar her appearance." We learnt that Mrs. Pearce has been designing and selling hats for the last ten years (four of them at Jays, London) and knows what just is, and just isn't right. It seems that our woman was wearing a halo, and that halos are more or less passe now.

Mrs. Pearce beckoned to an assistant and whispered something in her ear. The girl sit-ted to a cupboard in the wall and came back with a hat. We noticed a solemn look in her saucer blue eyes as she reverently handed it over to Mrs. Pearce, who held out the creation for us to inspect. In our innocence, we thought it lacked distinction; a dark blue felt, high in the crown, with a piece of netting carelessly tacked on the front. "Now that," said Mrs. Pearce, dreamily, "is a really smart hat."

We rarely allow ourselves to become obsessed by a phrase; but "Educated Ankles," that appeared in last week's newspapers reporting the re-opening of Shanghai's cabarets, did the trick. Fascinated, we journeyed to the Lido (Central), and investing a dollar, picked on a wisp of flame coloured silk. Mary, ninety-five pounds, olive skinned, and vivacious, is expert in steering hulking Gobs and braw Jocks in and out the pillars that, rather surprisingly, dot the Lido's floor. We tried a pas deux of our own invention, and one that can be relied upon to tie up the uninitiated. Mary followed like a lamb. Impressed, we offered an orangeade and asked for details. No clip joint hostess, she demurely refused the drink but obligingly supplied the information. It appears that her ankles were educated by watching other people's. Naturally intelligent, they quickly grasped first principles, and after a little practice soon mastered the crab like side steps and double shuffles beloved by the clientele.

The business is an example to Capital and Labour; one half the receipts going to the management; the other to the girls. The tickets are four for a dollar. A popular girl's rake off, and Mary in tops with the customers, is around five dollars a night. That averages 40 dances a session, 280 per week, 14,560 in a year, and, if you haven't lost interest, 43,680 for the three years Mary has been dancing. "Was she bothered by corns," we enquired, sympathetically. She shook her sleek head, but admitted that some evenings she felt tired. We observed a little gold cross hanging round her neck and discovered that Mary attends mass on a Sunday morning. It occurred to us that there are other and easier ways of living open to a good looking girl on this island, and, all in all, we thought Mary pretty nice.

If you are male and old enough to remember the days when whisky was eighty cents a bottle, you'll be interested to meet a

PRIVATE FACES IN PUBLIC PLACES

Mr. W. Pryde of the P.W.D. We interviewed him on the subject of the Public Library, but we mention the whisky, because somehow or other it kept cropping up in the conversation. Mr. Pryde, who hails from Auld Reekie, is a chunky, grey haired man round the fifties. He looked a trifle grim when we broached the subject of our visit.

"Yon Macwhirter, and a gentleman who spread himself over three columns, have already had a go at me," he said crisply. We hastily pointed out that we had no intention of having a go. We had strolled into the little grey building that kneels beside the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, like a Quaker girl compelled to room with Mrs. West, and poking around, came to the conclusion that the Library was scarcely fit to be public. We said all this, tactfully, to Mr. Pryde, and hinted that civic pride demanded something better. Mr. Pryde replied that had as the library was, it was better than no library at all. He explained this by telling us that in 1932 Government appointed a committee to report on the library which, even then, was in a pretty depressed condition. The committee, after carefully considering the pros and cons, recommended that the library be scrapped, pointing out that the literary needs of the literate public were already adequately provided for by club and institutional libraries. Government accepted the verdict and forthwith ordered the books to be dumped in the harbour. At this juncture, Mr. Pryde, a true Scot in that he dislikes waste and has a proper reverence for books, protested. There were, he informed Government, quite a number of people, too poor to pay club subscriptions, and for one reason and another barred from the various institutions, who looked to the Public Library for their reading matter. It is doubtful if Government would have altered their decision had it not been for Mr. Pryde's public spirited offer to supervise the library in an honorary capacity. Government relented, accepted Mr. Pryde's offer and the library was saved. Ever since then Mr. Pryde has kept a fatherly eye on the place. "We're pretty tight for money," he told us. "Just enough to pay the wages of the two Chinese librarians and a couple of coolies who keep the place clean. I don't suppose there's been a new book in the place since the time when you could buy a case of whisky, a case of gin, and a crate of beer for forty dollars," he finished, sadly. We enquired about those halcyon days. "Well," said Mr. Pryde, richly, "at the time the Brewers packed, gratis, half a dozen glasses in with every crate of beer. Then, if you visited a bachelor's mess and it was tea you drunk, you would have to wait until the cup was washed; but if it was a glass you were wanting—why there were hundreds of them." We left feeling that there were far too many books and not enough glasses in our world.

LITTLE NOTES of Great Importance

Skins get "hungry" too, and actually need nourishing and care — and very special care during a Hong Kong summer. So, naturally, winter cosmetics won't do. You must change to summer toiletries. So don't let yourself be bothered by shiny nose, melting lipstick, runny powder, sun-burn, and the rest of the summer nuisances — but consult the GRAND DISPENSARY. LITTLE NOTES of Great Importance

Now that the town is full of new arrivals, we natives have a hard time to show them all the sights. Nobody should miss the DRAGON LANTERN in Des Voeux Road. It is like an unofficial museum of Chinese art. Full of the finest masterpieces: pottery, bronzes, paintings, jades, silver and innumerable other things. Though the prices are the lowest in town every antique piece is fully guaranteed, so whether you know anything about Chinese art or not — you can buy at the DRAGON LANTERN with complete confidence. If you want less ambitious things: there are many masterly reproductions of famous antique originals.

Have you provided for a rainy day? No, I don't mean the family and that sort of thing . . . Quite plainly: have you a raincoat which keeps out rain and doesn't look like something you have inherited from dear Aunt Eulalia. If not: walk straight to LANE, CRAWFORD'S Ladies' Sa'lon. There are some water-proof silk raincoats there in plain colours or polka dots in neat little bags—to put away when "it ain't gonna rain no more." They are raincoats in the right sense of the word and at the same time chic. You can go out into the rain and stay dry and look as smart and neat as in an afternoon frock.

In the midst of all these profiteerings I am more than glad to announce the fine geste of our American Shop — MAIZEE'S, which is made for the benefit of the Shanghai refugees. MAIZEE'S have found that many of the ladies are in need of replenishing their wardrobes but they cannot afford the higher priced frocks. To meet them half-way MAIZEE'S have greatly reduced the prices of their summer frocks. This is what I call a helping hand! A woman likes to look her best even in an emergency and MAIZEE'S dresses are the tops in town. And with the prices made within reach even of a war-torn purse . . . isn't that grand!?

Summer faces, like summer frocks, should be lovely to look upon. COLONIAL DAMES preparations will help to "take all the hot weather look out of your complexion" and put it in tune with the crisp freshness of Spring! I have told you already of some of their preparations, and this week I recommend the Reconditioning Pack, a luxury cosmetic, but one which serves a constructive purpose. This pack possesses astringent, soothing, softening and muscle-toning qualities. Recommended to persons of any age for a delightful "pick-me-up" beauty treatment.

After speaking of things which create feminine glamour, you might think me prosaic to mention food. But an old saying insists that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach. So, there can be romance in food! And if you want your romance to last — be practical! Go to THE ASIA COY. for your foodstuffs. Fresh vegetables, fruits, tinned goods, meats, dairy products, groceries . . . all the finest and best-known brands and fresh shipments with every boat. And after buying from THE ASIA COY. just watch his face, his mood, as he is enjoying his food and his glad eyes when he finds out how economically you do it all!

Chamberlain Has Blundered

A NEW Prime Minister has sat at Pitt's desk in Downing-street through several eventful months. In what direction is he guiding this Empire among the nations?

Two new departures arrest our attention. In his first speech as Premier in the Commons, Mr. Chamberlain made a rather unusual appeal for Germany's friendship. That, indeed, was all he said on this unique occasion, and he has since said it again.

More recently he made an even more remarkable bid for Italian friendship in a personal letter to the Duce.

The rest of the record is negative. Japan is on the march again, but not even by a frank word will Mr. Chamberlain try to check her career of aggression.

There have been talks about world trade with the United States that have ended in the usual sterile commonplaces. Finally, the Spanish problem has entered a new and risky phase of dilatory and inconclusive talk.

What stands out, then, are these two friendly approaches to the Fascist Powers.

In many quarters Mr. Chamberlain's initiative is applauded as a contribution to the cause of peace. There is no great merit in remaining friends with our friends. The task of the peacemaker is to make friends with our enemies.

The danger comes from Italy and Germany. Ought we not, then, to use all our wit and all our charity to reach a reconciliation here?

There is a broad truth in this view which we of the Left ought not to forget. But diplomatic reconciliations are more than amiable gestures. They must involve the discovery on both sides of a common purpose.

Two Powers cease to oppose each other because they acquiesce in each other's aims. Let us consider, then, what reconciliation with Italy involves.

The New Italy

The main ground of rivalry or quarrel is simple, but very difficult to remove. Until recently, Italy was a naval Power of minor rank, mainly dependent on sea-borne supplies for most of her raw material.

So long as the British Navy commanded the Mediterranean routes Italy was friendly, since that was for her the policy of safety. But it was a relationship that came near subordination.

To-day Italy has in her aircraft and submarines, acting from well-chosen bases, a new power of attack.

Secondly, since she acquired Libya and fortified the little island of Pantellaria, she can cut the Mediterranean route between Sicily and Africa.

Thirdly, she can from Libya launch an attack on Egypt by land and air.

In short, she can render any use of the Mediterranean for British purposes extremely precarious. If she established herself permanently in Malaga and Majorca she could make it equally unsafe for the French.

On the other hand, by establishing her Empire in Abyssinia she has placed herself in a new sense at the mercy of the Power that holds the Suez Canal. By closing it Britain could make her latest possession worthless and untenable.

Here, then, is a relationship based on strategy and geography in which hostility means mutual frustration. So close is the interlocking that neither Power can feel secure save on a footing of perfect intimacy and trust.

The present relationship is so intolerable to both sides that it must end eventually in one of two ways—in an explosion or in a return to the old unquestioned friendship, but this time on a footing of equality.

Each can injure, thwart and threaten the other at so many vital points that a doubtful, auspicious relationship must in the long run be unendurable.

Abyssinia Betrayal

What would restore the old confidence? Of course, the British Empire will have to swallow its pride (I will not say "its principles") by an ungrudging recognition of the conquest of Abyssinia.

Of course, Italy will have to stop fostering Arab revolts by her broadcasts and her gifts of money and arms. But what about Spain?

I have been studying the recent statements in the Press that show the clearest signs of Foreign Office inspiration. They recognise two possible Italian aims in Spain.

First, Italy may be trying to establish herself on Spanish territory, notably at Malaga and Majorca. That, in the view of the Foreign Office, is intolerable. Since it has already happened not only in these places but throughout Franco's territory, I suppose that Downing Street is content to wait until the war is over.

By
H. N. Brailsford

Then, if not sooner, all Italian troops must vanish and, presumably, no naval or aerial bases must be retained.

That is not an easy condition to ensure; a civil aerodrome run by an Italian service is soon adapted for military purposes.

Destroying Communism

The other Italian aim in Spain is that which Mussolini publicly professes. It can be stated in two ways, and usually the Duce's spokesman, Signor Gayda, treats the two as identical. These are to destroy "Communism" in Spain, and to uproot Russian influence.

Such aims, the inspired journalists tell us, are perfectly compatible with Anglo-Italian friendship.

What do these phrases mean? There is no Communism in Spain, in the historic sense of this word. There is an able and energetic Communist Party, but it is pledged to the People's Front.

The slogan of the Republic is "democracy." Any Socialist measures that it adopts after victory will be carried by democratic process, and will be of a moderate Fabian type, with compensation to owners.

As for Russian influence, Moscow had neither Ambassador nor Consul in Spain before the Civil War. Her influence is due solely to the fact that she alone had the courage and generosity to help this struggling democracy in its hour of need.

How can an influence be uprooted that rests on gratitude? The only way is to ensure Franco's victory. In that event Italian (and German) influence will replace Russian.

From that, Downing Street may be prepared, hoping doubtless to buy a share of influence for itself with a loan to Spain.

Threat To Russia

But from this point, Signor Gayda's exposition of Italian policy takes a wider sweep. It looks beyond the Mediterranean; it is European.

It is based on the "Rome-Berlin axis." It does not wish to exclude France; on the contrary, it seeks to enlist her in the defence of "civilisation."

One knows what Fascists mean by "civilisation": they mean the existing capitalist system and the principle of authority.

The plan is clear enough in its broad outlines. Democracy is to be destroyed and the working class subjugated in Spain. Then France, surrounded on three sides by allied Fascist States will herself come to terms and relapse into Conservatism if not actually into Fascism.

She will no longer play her part as a great Power, but will seek safety in some Western Pact that will ensure peace between Britain, France, Germany and Italy.

The Soviet Union will be outside this zone of safety. Against her, and also in Central Europe, Hitler and Mussolini will enjoy a free hand.

End of Democracy

One cannot be sure that this plan conforms to the views of Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Eden. But it is, on the whole, the most probable interpretation of their policy.

Their interest—almost, indeed, their exclusive interest—lies in the Empire. The Empire will be safe while the French hold the Channel if German ambitions are diverted to the East, while a gorged and reconciled Italy shares with it the control of the Mediterranean.

It must be well-armed on sea as in the air, but the purpose of these arms is not to defend democracy or to back collective security, but rather to bring the Have-not Powers to terms.

Italy and Germany will prefer the friendship of the Empire to its enmity, partly because it will be too formidable for attack, but also because it will not oppose their expansion so long as they keep out of its way.

This is not a policy of peace; it is a policy of consummate imperialism. If it is realised it means not merely the postponement for a generation of any Socialist advance in Europe; it means the submersion in Europe of any free working-class.

The key to this whole plan lies in Spain. There is being shaped the future of European liberty.

Until we can smash the sham of non-intervention and restore to the Republic its customary rights under international law, the prospect confronts us of a still wider collusion with the Dictators for the ruin of democracy.

HONG KONG, SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1937

KING LEOPOLD'S LETTER

THE suggestion of the King of the Belgians contained in a letter to M. Van Zeeland his Prime Minister, that an independent permanent institute of economic research should be created has drawn attention to the work already being done in this connection by the League of Nations.

Since March a Committee of the League of Nations has been considering the problem of equal access to raw material supplies. The immediate origin of this Committee can be traced to the speech made by Sir Samuel Hoare to the League Assembly in 1935, when in announcing the intention of Great Britain, so soon to be belied, of taking her full share in resisting any attempts to settle international problems by aggression rather than by arbitration, he simultaneously stated that "... as the question (of raw materials) is causing discontent and anxiety, the wise course is to investigate it, to see what the proposals are for dealing with it, and if the trouble is substantial, to try to remove it." And later, "The Government that I represent will, I know, be prepared to take its share in any collective attempt to deal, in a fair and effective way, with a problem that is certainly troubling many people at present and may trouble them even more in future." Mr. Eden at the 1936 Assembly spoke along similar lines. "This is a matter (question of raw materials) which seems suitable for discussion at Geneva, and indeed, for impartial expert enquiry under the auspices of the League on the lines suggested by the U. K. delegate last year." The present Committee was actually set up as the result of a resolution proposed by a British delegate, Mr. Morrison, and is expected to make its report to the League Council in September.

Although excessive national pride and belief in a philosophy of force are the two most potent factors making for war to-day the question of the fair distribution of the products of the earth among mankind is one, the solution of which would remove one of the main stimulants to war.

If, however, the recommendations of this Committee of the League of Nations are to serve their purpose a much greater sense of political and economic inter-dependence and a much clearer conception of world unity will have to be present than is prevalent in the world at the moment.

The principles of this need for world co-operation in economic matters contained in King Leopold's letter are undoubtedly sound and have been well received throughout Europe. They are understood to be not unconnected with M. Van Zeeland's discussions with President Roosevelt and leading European statesmen. More than lip-service however will be required by the Governments concerned if they are to be put into effective practice.

As Switzerland, whose size precluded her from attaining world power rank was one of the reasons for the choice of Geneva as the headquarters of the League of Nations, so Belgium, for similar reasons, under her present enlightened King and Prime Minister may perhaps play a decisive part in solving the economic problems of the world.

China's power of resistance to the Japanese military machine continued to evoke surprise and approval. The great Japanese offensive, much-heralded, on the Liuhoo-Woosung fronts, was brought to a complete standstill in two days. Japan claimed the capture of both Woosung and Paoshan prematurely. Woosung later fell, but Paoshan remained beyond Japanese military reach and such heavy losses were suffered in vain onslaughts that it was confessed by General Matsui that the extensive reinforcement already available left him insufficiently equipped. The second grand-scale attack threatened remained undelivered and foreign military opinion was unanimous that every moment of delay served China's purposes.

Explaining the action naively as "self-defence in the widest sense of the term," Japan on Monday ordered aerial bombing of half a dozen points throughout Kwangtung Province, including Canton, Swatow and Shikwan. The Canton raid provoked the greatest excitement, and Hong Kong received a fresh heavy influx of refugees. The raiders concentrated chiefly on points of military importance, casualties were few and damage slight. At least two of the bombers were brought down and destroyed. Further extension of the scope of hostilities, the bombardment of Amoy, Forts by Japanese warships on Friday, had all the markings of a "spite" raid. The Amoy garrison, whose allegiance to Nanking had been called into question, had been replaced in Amoy by the 157th Division.

Bombing of the President Hoover by Chinese aeroplanes caused a profound shock. She was apparently mistaken for a Japanese transport, and seven were injured, one fatally. China did not hesitate to accept responsibility and offer full reparation; Admiral Yarnell did not hesitate in prohibiting American ships from calling at Shanghai. The readiness with which Washington accepted China's apologies and explanations left little doubt of American sympathies in the dispute.

THIS WEEK

The line of policy of the United States was not, however, easy to trace. Mr. Cordell Hull made a point of denying Anglo-American co-operation in the Far East, while admitting that consultations were frequent. American's actions tended rather to belie her cautionary words: There were signs that Washington was not altogether oblivious to the possibility of her becoming involved in steps of graver consequence than appeals to peace. There were reports of the impending despatch of a cruiser division. Refusal to apply the Neutrality Act was plainly governed by the consideration that China would be more seriously harmed than Japan. Public opinion in America, in the meantime, revealed itself as growing more and more intensely hostile to Japanese aggression.

Eyes remained on London. Japan had not replied to the British Hugessen Incident Note yesterday, although it was presented on Sunday afternoon last. Emphatic in its criticism, the Note was mild in demand. Strategically, this seemed a shrewd stroke, for signs were a "spite" raid. The Amoy garrison, whose allegiance to Nanking had been called into question, had been replaced in Amoy by the 157th Division.

to-morrow (Monday). A Committee of the Cabinet was sufficient for the mystery submarine crisis.

The situation in the Mediterranean moved from bad to seriously worse, though it took a deliberate attack by a submarine upon H.M.S. Havock to stir the British Admiralty into activity. Depth charges are believed to have sunk the Havock's attacker, which was never, officially, seen, though rumours were circulated that the Navy had definitely identified her as an Italian. The Italian newspapers denied this startling allegation, but in the mildest of tones, stressing Italy's desire for rapprochement with Great Britain. Mr. Eden and the Earl of Perth (formerly Sir Eric Drummond) probably reached the conclusion that this no stronger evidence of the earnestness of Italy's desire for an agreement was needed.

On Wednesday, the Japanese Foreign Office was authority for a cryptic statement. It was announced that Japan might be compelled to resort to "effective and suitable" measures to prevent the importation of munitions to China. Foreign official comment upon this striking declaration was noteworthy for its non-existence, a fact interpreted as hinting the gravity with which its implications are viewed. With Canton as the only "open port" in China at the moment, the fear of complications could not be overlooked.

For twenty-four hours, the typhoon thrust the Sino-Japanese war off the front pages of the local newspapers, an achievement in itself. More than 35 ships were ashore at one time or other, 27 remain in that predicament, a great many more sent out distress signals. Deaths probably exceed 450. The wind force broke world records, one gust striking at 164 miles an hour. Superficial damage was enormous. The total was estimated at several million dollars.

SCRUTATOR.

THE PASSING HOUR

By A. N. M.

Books of the Hour

ANY middle aged man can cast his memory back to the days when the publication of a book was a serious undertaking. It involved a presumption that the writer had made a special study of his subject, that there was a void in the relevant literature that only he could fill, that his proofs had probably been submitted to other experts for criticism, and that his publisher staked his reputation on readers agreeing that the book did not fall below the high standard that a long series of careful selections had established. Then the offspring of so much anxious thought and meticulous correction had to run the gauntlet of the ruthless reviewers of the old "Saturday Review", who checked all the references to see that no quotations had been unfairly torn from its context, and made merry particularly with any trace of pomposity or pedantry. Any writing that did not care to challenge those rigorous judges was appropriate to journalism, and beneath the dignity of cloth binding. Nowadays such comments on passing events made to catch the public interest of the moment are put into boards and issued post haste to a wider public, regardless of their doom to early supersession when events have passed on and outdated them. They are midway between journalism and literature.

Their Value

THERE is much to be said for them nonetheless, on certain conditions. The author must have substantial knowledge of his subject before he sits down to dash off his impressions, he must have something new to tell, and he must not draw too much on his imagination in the telling. The early books on the Abyssinian campaign were examples of everything that should be avoided. Very few people had any knowledge of that inaccessible country, correspondents were carefully shepherded, and their guesswork padding showed them in a ridiculous light when facts began to percolate through. Of the Spanish war books all that one can say is that all prophecies have been belied and that the peculiar sectionalism of the national temperament has completely puzzled the stay-at-home reader. One wonders whether the tangled skein will ever get unraveled, or whether, like many campaigns of the past the campaign itself will always be hidden by the incidents. It is satisfactory to find a book about another problem that does meet the conditions of success, in Mr. Douglas Duff's "Palestine Picture," though the picture he draws is disturbing enough.

Douglas Duff

MR. Duff was a Police Inspector for ten years, and being a man of wide education he made the topography and history of Palestine an intensive study. His references to the revolutions and wars and legends of three thousand years are necessarily brief, but the background does suggest vividly what a task it is to introduce order when so many nations, some of them quite small, have at last through freedom got the chance to revive traditions handed down through centuries of oppression. There is an old proverb of the Levant that "where the hoof of a Turkish horse has trod no grass will grow." The task of to-day is to make the grass grow again, and for some years rapid advance was being made. One reference is of special interest to Hong Kong. Mr. Duff found that Nazareth and Cana of Galilee were at the moment too disturbed to be visited, and he was advised to take a track round Mt. Tabor, drift

"This we did, passing through the large Jewish colony of Meshah, at the foot of Tabor, where stands the new Agricultural School given by Kadoorie, the Jewish Financier, who has done more for Jew and Arab in Palestine than any other man on Earth. The other section of his gift, the Arab Agricultural College at Tulkarim, is under the able direction of Heald, an Englishman with many years of service in Egypt and Palestine, who is assisted by his wife as matron, a couple whom I remember with a great deal of affectionate gratitude. For once in this topsy turvy land the right people have been put in the right place, and if there were more of the Heald type in Palestine there would be none of the present unrest." The truth seems to be that as in India, Egypt, and elsewhere the superficial literary education that has been given has done no more than create a class of young clerks with just enough intelligence to be carried away by clever and unscrupulous propagandists of disorder whose one idea is to make Government billets for themselves. "I say," said one of the most successful Jewish settlers "and I know that what I say is correct, that the hatred and murder which is directed against us is the work of the low off-end class in the towns, the young pups who have had some little education, enough to make them dislike the idea of hard work." The Christian alumni of the big American Missionary College at Beyrout are as anti-English as anybody, and dream of a Christian-Arab republican combination to drive "all foreigners" out of the country—that means both British and Jews. Of course a sudden gift of freedom is often very indigestible, but the nett result is that every outrage and every punishment creates new irreconcilable of union is an hysterical hatred of the British Administration. We have had to face worse troubles, but clearly things will not right themselves through a policy of

BY L. KNIGE,

A Weekly Common-Sense Talk

This Week I Discuss: "Common" Asthma, The Cause And Helpful Treatment

IT was once thought that all forms of asthma were largely a nervous affection, the cure depending upon the proper and continuous treatment of the nerves controlling the organs of breathing. In the case of bronchial asthma this is now known to be definitely incorrect.

Actually there are three different types of asthma of the heart, the nerves, and the lungs; though by far the most common is asthma of the lungs, or to state the case more correctly, of the bronchial tubes.

Asthma, as a cause of respiratory difficulty is unique amongst diseases for it is the only malady in which the difficulty in breathing is not in taking in supplies of air, but in expelling the air from the lungs.

The outward signs of this troublesome complaint are a more or less "dry" cough, a "sneezing" as the breath is forcibly expelled, nervous gasping, and a great mental fear of choking to death. The disease has been charged to several causes, amongst them is the swelling of the lining of the windpipe, and a special form of inflammation of the smaller branches of the bronchial tubes.

What happens in an attack is that a sense of breathlessness induces violent efforts to breathe air in, and, owing to the spasm of the bronchial tubes, this air is kept locked up in the chest. The result is that the lungs become over-distended and the chest assumes a barrel shape.

In the chronic asthma sufferer this over expansion and altered shape of the chest is more or less persistent. In these cases certain exercises have been developed to help the sufferer on the basis of their assistance to help counteract the tendency for chronic over-distension, keeping the lungs and chest down to their normal natural volume.

The lining of the windpipe has been mentioned as one of the suspected causes for bronchial asthma, this is now generally acknowledged to be the sole centre of this type of a very common trouble. The lining somewhat resembles a sponge, when colds are caught continually a portion of the sponge grows in size with a consequent contraction of the area through which the air passes, thus the expulsion of the air, a more difficult movement than inspiration, is rendered harder during attacks. This distension of the lungs is also harmful in that it stops them from quickly fulfilling their regular normal function of purifying the blood stream. In time, should treatment be postponed, the "sponge" can enlarge to such an extent that the chronic sufferer does almost literally choke to death, though medical history reveals this to be exceedingly rare. During an attack the mental strain brought about by the thought of impending suffocation causes the most strain on the body.

The mechanical prevention of asthma is often the reverse of what may be expected. Normally breathing exercises increase the expansion of the lungs, which of course is useless to the asthma patient whose trouble is that he is generally over-expanded. If you watch an asthmatic breathe deeply you will observe the respiration is almost entirely carried out with the upper part of the chest. The lower part generally remains fully expanded and almost immobile.

The idea then is to teach the sufferer to utilise the lower part of his chest and to employ the use of the diaphragm to a greater extent than he has been accustomed to.

Iodine is the great specific for bronchial asthma, your Doctor invariably prescribes this healing agent in its most suitable form, for the effect is to dry up the enlarged "sponge" in the windpipe.

For those who suffer from asthma here are some useful hints which will help to prevent the occurrence of attacks, and to give ease during a spasm.

As soon as you begin to feel that an attack is imminent no matter what you have done in the past—do not go to bed—try your utmost to keep on going. By continual movement you prevent the circulation from falling, a sluggish circulation in turn affects your strength, and it is strength you need to cope with, and fight off, an attack.

Sunshine is of untold benefit in treatment, when an attack comes on should the sun be shining, cover yourself well, leaving the chest exposed to the sun's rays, do this for twenty minutes. Next cover the chest and let the sun play for a similar period on the area from the nape of the neck to the middle of the spine. Be careful to avoid winds and draughts whilst you are taking a "bath".

Relief will come from this simple remedy—by perseverance, gradually increasing the length of exposure as your skin becomes accustomed to the sun's rays, definite healing will be obtained. Should sunshine be impossible a Hanovian lamp is an excellent substitute.

Apart from the value of sunshine it is well to remember the benefits which accrue from these two body positions. During an attack, bend forward, this non-constricting position allows the greatest amount of air to be expelled with each expiratory action. At night, sleep on the stomach, also a non-constricting position.

Two more items of equal importance:—

Mainly about WOMEN "COMMON" ASTHMA

A good many years ago Professor Burt wrote a book, "The Young Delinquent," based on his experience and researches as a psychological adviser to the London County Council. This was immediately and deservedly recognised as the standard English work on the subject, and was studied not only by those whose work brought them into contact with the practical problems of juvenile delinquency but also by all those who were interested in the subject. Many people have waited with some impatience for further volumes which were promised on other aspects of sub-normality.

The first of these has now appeared on the subject of educational backwardness. This new book has all the merits of the earlier book on delinquency and deals with a subject of even greater practical interest, since many more children are backward than delinquent. It, too, must take its place as a standard text-book in the training of teachers, and it is to be hoped that it will be widely read by others who have the care of children who show any of the difficulties which are discussed by the author.

Authority On Subject

On intelligence and intelligence testing Professor Burt speaks with the authority of one of the earliest English workers on the subject. Much of what is here said might now be found in any modern text-book of educational psychology, but it has become an accepted part of educational science largely as a result of Professor Burt's own early researches on intelligence testing.

It would be much more difficult to find elsewhere an adequate account of the causes of backwardness which are not the results of lack of intelligence—sensory defects and defects in perception and imagery—which are lucidly discussed by Professor Burt. Of particular interest are, I think, his treatment of left-handedness and of speech defects. A small boy, for example, asked to recite a poem, began with the sentences: "Ah bardy tzardy debbut; arrow piddi tabe; die chitta chub; die wippy tut..." Burt ingeniously shows how, by reversing the laws of the evolution of language, it is possible to discover that this speech defective was reciting the Lord's Prayer.

The book is throughout practical. It not only discusses the causes of the various types of backwardness but also their cure. The author shows how often special training can eradicate educational difficulties when these do not arise from low inborn intelligence. He pleads powerfully against the idea that the teacher with a class of backward children is doing an inferior task to that of the teacher of the brighter pupils.

Nurses Given Relief

After years of high stiff collars, nurses are to be able to move their necks.

An attractive and comfortable uniform—rather like that of a nurse in an American film—has been adopted for nurses at one of London's most important hospitals—the Elizabeth Garrett Anderson Hospital.

The uniform has a low neck and short sleeves. The old three-inch-high starched collar fastened with a stud had disappeared. In its place is neat reefer collar, cool and comfortable.

All white in colour, the dress is made in one piece, fastening by means of six rubber buttons. The old uniforms—which were designed in 1866—had six separate pieces. These were frock, apron, stiff collar, stiff belt, and stiff cuffs. The uniforms had long sleeves, of course, which restricted the nurses' movement to a certain extent.

Great satisfaction is felt by the nurses at the change-over.

"One thing which pleases my staff greatly," the matron of the hospital told me, "is the fact that they are now able to wear light stockings of their own choosing with the uniforms instead of the old regulation black cotton."

Many other hospitals throughout England are expected to adopt similar new uniforms if the Elizabeth Garrett Anderson experiment proves successful.

One criticism that could be made of the new uniform by the unthinking is the size of the laundry bill that will confront the hospital. As the uniform is to be all white, every nurse is to have a clean dress every day.

A Use For Old Ties

At last a use for old ties has been discovered. Instead of using them to tie up the dahlias or beans in the garden, just collect and save them up, then sort them out in groups of different shades or tones. When you have about four or five dozen, taken three at a time and plait them into strips by placing two of the narrow ends to one wide end for one plait, and then two wide ends and one narrow end together for the next plait, so as to avoid bulky parts, then tack the plaited strips neatly together to form a long cord; this then can be laid on to any shape made of ordinary sugar sacking or such durable material.

When plaiting the ties together, do it rather loosely, and fold the sides smoothly inwards. Now sew the long cord of plaiting in place as you twist it into any desired shape; that is, let the edge of the last round be tacked to the next, and that the whole should be sewn firmly on to the sacking. You will then have a nice mat for use in the kitchen or bathroom.

1. Leave alcoholic drinks, tea and coffee, etc., to the other fellow; highly seasoned food, sauces, onions, garlic and heavily salted foods should also go untouched, for they tend to irritate the lining of the windpipe thus hastening an attack.

2. Asthmatic people in this climate must avoid iced drinks, and very cold food. In Hong Kong and South China more trouble is caused by catching colds through the taking of iced drinks than in any other manner, this statement including both sea bathing and exposure to cold winds.

It is also wise to avoid any form of extreme exertion which may cause colds through excessive perspiration, and lastly, avoid sudden draughts.

The Ideal Woman For 1938 FRED ASTAIRE GOES IN FOR THE BALLET

ARE YOU LIKE HER?

WOMEN are going to be smaller than they were a few years ago and they will have again the old "curves," the subject of admiration of our grandfathers.

Leroy Prinz, the famous dance director of Paramount Film Company in Hollywood, has just lately tested no fewer than 1,000 girls for parts as "ideal models" in the latest musical spectacles entitled "Artists and Models." Russell Patterson, the well-known painter of "flappers" and flaming youth types, actually helped him to measure all these modern beauties. Both agreed that Miss Lynn Bailey, "nee model" of the film city, is the "ideal woman of 1938" with all the enviable proportions of a modern Amazon.

The Chart

According to Hollywood investigations, the physical proportions of the coming ideal woman are:

Height	5ft. 6in.
Bust	34 inches
Waist	26 inches
Hips	36 inches

Further investigations in both England and America show that there will be great changes in feminine hip measurements and waist-line in 1938, owing to the increase in athletic games exercises. Mere slimness will turn into muscles.

The remarkable drop in feminine heights is probably due to the fact that a new generation of "the babies of the war" are now growing to real womanhood. The slimming craze of to-day will undoubtedly be reduced in the near future and natural curves will be in vogue again, although there is no possibility of the extreme wider and larger measurements of 5-10 years ago.

The average bathing girl of 1938 will very much differ from that of 1937 and the previous years.

THE author of a recently successful West End play has a theory that there can be only one successful formula for screen love affairs: "Boy meets girl; boy loses girl; boy gets girl." This is more or less what happens all very delightfully and very rhythmically in "Shall We Dance," one of the best Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers films yet made and to be shown in Hong Kong soon.

In it Fred Astaire is a well-known ballet artist named Petrov, while Ginger Rogers, as Linda Keene, is an equally celebrated tap-dancer in revue. The meeting of such a pair is bound to lead to the "marriage" of ballet and tap-dancing.

But before this intimate union can take place both boy and girl are tipped into a series of amusing misunderstandings, embarrassments and estrangements by that incorrigible comedian, Edward Everett Horton.

Some Hard Work

Paired is his name in the picture, and by profession he is Petrov's manager. Paired is anxious that Petrov should accept the offer of the Metropolitan Opera Company to make a New York debut.

Petrov, however, wants to marry Linda; so in the luxurious liner in which this most unsuited trio cross the Atlantic, Paired has some hard work to do.

Petrov works 24 hours a day making love, but after temporary victory of the Paired forces of cunning determination to strangle the romance, all that Linda can do to save her own face is to fly angrily away from the liner in an aeroplane.

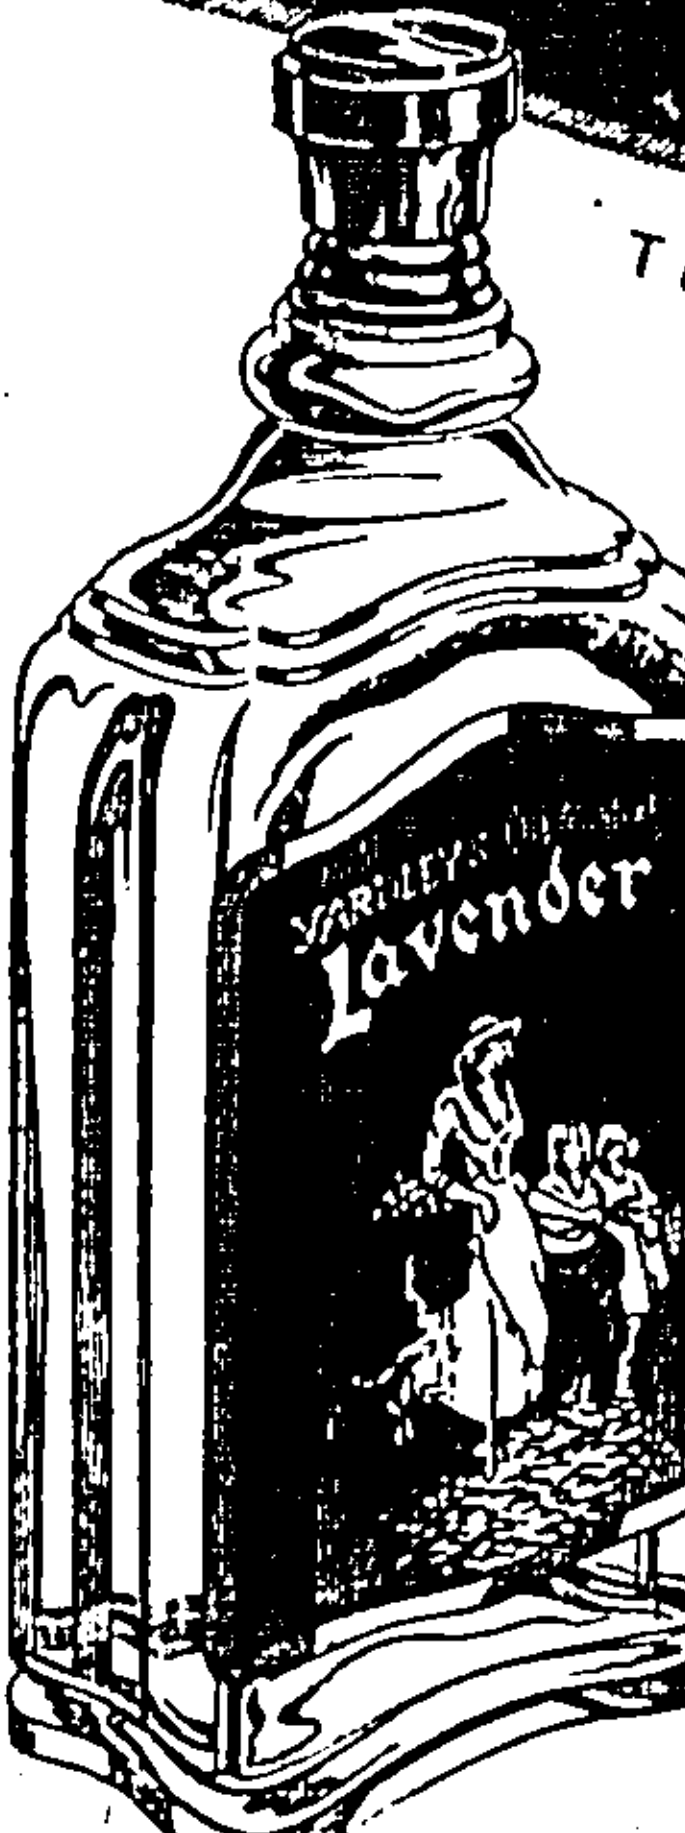

Good Dancing

The final scene before the general armistice shows Astaire dancing in Russian ballet with Harriet Hoctor. This short scene, which is the only serious one in the film, is extremely fine to watch, and the producer of the film is to congratulate on employing a professional ballet dancer rather than attempting to make Ginger Rogers do the act herself.

Most people will like this film. It introduces many new songs and tunes, it never attempts to trespass beyond its own field of fast slick entertainment, and the dancing is the best of its kind.

LESSONS OF AIR WAR

The War in the Air, Vol. VI, By H. A. Jones. Oxford: Clarendon Press. Two vols. 25s.

In this volume Mr. Jones brings to an end the official history of the war in the air. It is comprehensive, for it covers Flanders, Palestine, Mesopotamia, Persia, India, Italy, Macedonia, the Mediterranean, and the North Sea. It varies from discussions on high policy to detailed descriptions of day-to-day flying and fighting, and all of it calls for careful reading and reflection. A few of the author's conclusions on debatable points may be selected.

Soon after the Royal Air Force came into being on April 1, 1918, the new Air Ministry decided to wage war on its own account and dispatched to France an Independent Air Force under Major General (now Lord) Trenchard. This force was not under the command of Lord Haig, and there was some discussion before it was placed under the general command of General Foch. It proceeded to bomb munition works in the Rhine towns, but once or twice Foch directed it to assist the Allied armies in the final battles of the war. The policy of having such a force in being when the Germans were almost breaking through to the Channel ports and when every bomber might have done something to hold up the German reinforcements is very doubtful. The actual damage which the bombing did to munition works was not great, but a German authority has admitted that the moral effect, coming as it did when the German people were war weary, was serious.

NO MORE ASTHMA

Doctor's Daughter Tells How Father Was Cured

The daughter of a British medical man was instrumental in changing the whole life of an Asthma sufferer. Her father had been a chronic Asthma sufferer until he tried Ephazone tablets. So she immediately recommended Ephazone to another victim who writes:

"A doctor's daughter told me about Ephazone which had cured her father of chronic Asthma. I got a bottle at once and at once got relief. I now live in a new world. No more Asthma. Sleep well, eat well and am able to do a good day's work at the age of 75."

This case is so typical of many whose whole outlook in life has been changed miraculously with a few doses of Ephazone. Think what it means. Sound sleep at night, normal meals, normal pleasures and no more haunting dread of impending attacks. Veritably you "live in a new world" as former sufferers graphically describe it. One Ephazone Tablet proves to you how true this is. Whether young or old, whether you have suffered a week or a lifetime it makes no difference, one Ephazone Tablet ends the attack in a few minutes. So rapid is the action of Ephazone that the moment a tablet reaches the stomach it breaks up and releases soothing, healing medicaments the effect of which is usually felt in half-a-minute!

Ephazone has long enjoyed the approval of the medical profession. Hundreds of British Hospitals including Government Institutions and thousands of Doctors throughout the world have been supplied with Ephazone. Not only is Ephazone safe, speedy and certain in effect, it is also economical. Each tablet acts and progressive treatment means fewer doses. Packed in bottles of 15 and 45 effective doses. Valuable free book for every sufferer. Write to Banker & Co. Ltd., P. O. Box 530, Hong Kong.

"The Struggle for the Pacific," by Gregory Binstock. Published by George Allen and Unwin, Ltd. (12/6).

EUROPE—the highly civilised, intensely organised peninsula of the great Asiatic continent, and India, Asia Minor, China and Indo-China—the potential Elysian fields of the future and the important economic and political battleground of the present! Mr. Binstock in his extremely able book on this part of Asia, begins at the very beginning, when the first Europeans settled in the Philippines and Japan, and he proceeds to make his point not from deduction but from known facts, having drawn his information from such well established sources as the political and military treatises of Berlin, Tokyo, Leningrad and the League of Nations' Year Book and his statistics from the economic researches of practically every nation in the world.

Written a few months ago, this book is an amazing forecast of the present actualities, and for a thorough understanding of the economic and political reasons behind Japan's recent aggressive policy it should be read by everyone interested in the situation as it stands to-day. However, Mr. Binstock also predicts that the real struggle in the Pacific is yet to come; namely between Russia and Japan and America and Japan due to the latter's pressing need for expansion. He describes the series of interventions that have led to the conflict of imperialisms in Eastern Asia and the dramatic changes which not only led to the modernising of Japan after her self-isolation of 200 years but are even now transforming in a bewildering manner and with great rapidity the whole complex of nations.

Finally he sums up the issue confronting Eastern Asia at the moment. Undoubtedly Mr. Binstock's learned treatise is of the greatest importance to statesmen and politicians to-day, for he has drawn his information from sources inaccessible to investigators here, deriving many details which will surprise even those familiar with Far Eastern politics.—I.G.O.

HOW many people would recall without being reminded that the session of Parliament that virtually came to an end last week was opened by King Edward VIII? It shows on what a plane of big events the world is moving that fact could have got so quickly buried in our consciousness.

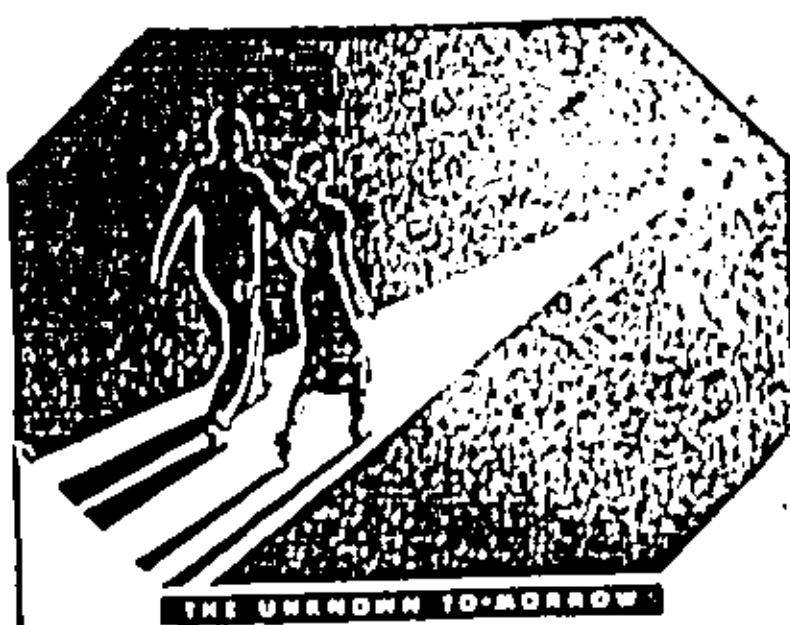

Edward VIII it was who read the Speech from the Throne in November that laid down the programme of work, now just completed, promising measures, by this time mostly Acts of Parliament, to deal with political disorder, to consolidate and extend the Factories Acts, to carry out plans for physical training, to transfer the trunk roads from the county councils to the Ministry of Transport, to increase

SUN LIFE OF CANADA
SECURITY • ECONOMY • PROFITABILITY
THERE'S A SUN LIFE POLICY FOR EVERYONE

Ministers' and (though this was not in last November's bond) members' salaries, and to do something for agriculture. Parliament had only been a month at work on these tasks, in discharging which King Edward VIII had washed them God-speed, when he himself laid down his own task and surrendered his throne into the hands of his brother.

The December week that saw that dynastic and emotional upset belongs to a wider history than that of Parliament, but it also makes one of the great weeks of all Parliamentary history by the absolute seal it set upon the supremacy of Parliament. It had one more immediate result. It crowned Mr. Baldwin's political career with one of the greatest personal triumphs that a Prime Minister ever had and presented him with the perfect moment for giving up the Premiership, an ambition (the true word in his case) he had nursed for some time. He could never even have dreamed of such an exit. All he seemed to be looking for was a quiet moment when the press barons were not bellowing "Baldwin must go," and then he would slip out. But fate did this for him and he joined the few Prime Ministers who have gone voluntarily into retirement at the zenith of their popularity. He was always favoured of the gods.

The resignation was formally delayed for some months—until after the Coronation, — but Mr. Baldwin's Premiership really ended with the accession of King George, and from that time control gradually passed into the hands of Mr. Chamberlain. That change, too, must give this session a salience in history because it ended a period as well as gave us a new Prime Minister. Though "Experience Chamberlain" has not gone far yet, it does not seem impossible that Mr. Chamberlain may hold on to some form of Toryism evacuated of its selfishness, as Mr. Baldwin did, but it is nevertheless already evident that he cannot supply the Baldwin temper, and that was even more valuable to his party than the Baldwinian interpretation of Toryism. Mr. Baldwin was a sedative, and a sedative mixed with tempered Toryism was bound to make potent appeal to an easygoing people. The more positive-minded Mr. Chamberlain cannot help being something of an irritant, and though he has obviously been trying to keep the fighter in him under, the lively fellow has broken free once or twice of late and spoken the harsh word. Moreover, without quite knowing what he is seeking the House of Commons begins to sense in him some clear-cut aims in foreign policy, and because they are clear-cut they could conceivably spell trouble for him in the House of Commons and in the country. Mr. Baldwin made a vague, pacific opportunism the counterpart, in foreign affairs, of his liberalised Toryism at home. Nevertheless, no one could deny that Mr. Chamberlain has favourably impressed Parliament since he became Prime Minister. Once more it is being shown that office can enlarge a man if there are the seeds of strength in him, and some of such seeds were always there in Mr. Chamberlain. His appeal for cool heads at the time of the Leipzig affair showed him superbly confident of himself and of the Government's policy. He suffered defeat on his first National Defence Contribution (though it was the defeat of a liberal idea), but his opponent as soon as they saw the substitute tax knew that the Prime Minister was really the conqueror, and certainly he behaved like one. There is no man in public life who seems to be more supported by an inner consciousness of disinterestedly seeking the truth about a problem, though he is probably not as free as he thinks from rationalising his prejudices.

The Prime Minister apart, the session has brought increase of reputation to but one or two Ministers. Mr. Eden seems more matched to this difficult hour abroad than he has ever done before. He has much experience behind him now; events teach Foreign Secretaries their job in double quick time these days. He speaks with greater authority and he speaks better. It has manifestly been a much more congenial task to defend non-intervention than to defend the Abyssinian surrender. He was clearly half-ashamed to excuse the latter. Non-intervention commands his full assent, and therefore he has never failed to argue for it.

Sir John Simon, so good as Home Secretary, has still to be tested as Chancellor of the Exchequer, but his handling of the second N.D.C. has certainly inspired confidence. At the Home Office Sir Samuel Hoare exhibits that precise "prunes and prisms" competence we have seen at the India Office and the Admiralty. Sir Thomas Inskip, if he is co-ordinating defence at all, is doing it by stealth, and the House of Commons has largely lost interest in his doings, perhaps because it does not believe they amount to much.

Sports Chatter

I am informed that there will be little football on Sundays this season as, apart from the Chinese Clubs and the Police, none of the other First Division clubs are keen on playing on Sundays. The Sen-forths are definitely against playing on Sundays, though it is not yet known what attitude the Middlessex will adopt.

Glendinning In Semi-Final
W. GLENDINNING, the Second Division Police skip, has now reached the semi-final stage of the Police Club Singles Lawn Bowls Championship.

Kwok Forced To Rest
WONG SUEN-MAN, who is at present in charge of the Mak Ngah Association of Canton, tells me that Kwok Chun-hang is still very weak and will be out of competitive swimming for at least eight or 10 months, which probably means that he will be unavailable for competitive swimming this and next season.

Recent interviews with a number of Shanghai's lady hockey players who are at present in the Colony reveal the fact that several may be playing for Colony clubs during their stay here.

A recent arrival in the Colony was S. Chowdury, who played in one or two representative hockey matches last season. He left the Colony towards the latter stages of last season and has spent a short time in India.

"Bob" Henderson, who proved a live-wire in Y.M.C.A. hockey last season, will probably again be asked to take charge of hockey during the forthcoming season.

Tremlett Transferred
S. A. TREMLETT, who played for the "Civilians" hockey team last season at left-back and also for the European Y.M.C.A., has been transferred to Canton and will not be available this coming season.

Miss Bomko Here
MISS FRANCES BOMKO, one of the finest lady hockey right-backs ever to have been seen in action in Hong Kong—she has represented Shanghai in the three Interport games to date—is at present in the Colony.

Miss Glover Turns To Riding
MISS KATHLEEN GLOVER, local secretary of the Women's League of Health and Beauty, is a keen horsewoman. She is a promising member of the Equine Sports Club at Shatin.

Bill Muir, well-known local all-round sportsman, and one of the most enthusiastic baseballers in the Colony, is also a fine rider, indulging in this sport at every available opportunity.

A. H. Basto, the Kowloon Tong lawn bowls skip, is a keen tennis player and spends most of his leisure moments, when not on the bowling green, on the tennis courts.

W. LAWRENCE

Wilfred Lawrence, above, Colony swimming champion, will be unable to swim for some time as he is convalescing from an attack of bronchitis.

Interporter For Club
RONNIE SLEAP, who was a member of the last Shanghai Rugby Football Interport team to visit Hong Kong, is available for the Club this coming season. He is now employed by Messrs. A. S. Watson and Co. Ltd.

Geer To Play Rugby?
R. G. GEER, a well-known Shanghai Interport Rugby player, is now stationed in the Colony and is also available this coming season.

Miss Prince Down Here
MISS BILLY PRINCE, well-known Shanghai sportswoman and a good swimmer, was seen at Repulse Bay last Sunday, and may be seen next Saturday swimming for the Shanghai ladies against Hong Kong's ladies.

Hopkins May Be Riding
H. F. HOPKINS, who played for the Club "A" Rugby fifteen last season, and for Ireland in the International series, is contemplating riding as a novice jockey during the second half of the racing programme.

Hynes Playing Soccer
I HEAR that Desmond Hynes, who has played both soccer and Rugby for the Club, will take part in the former game at inside-right.

Flemming Leaving Club?
I HEAR that G. Flemming, who played for the Club last season at inside-right, will not be playing for them this season.

Air Force Swimmer
I HEAR that Chan Ki-chung, Kwangtung's leading short distance sprinter, will not be available for the Mak Ngah Association owing to the present tension prevailing in Canton. Chan is a member of the Canton Air Force.

By the Judge

NEWS has just been received that Fung Man Kit and Fu Kar-hing, who figured prominently in local football some seasons ago and who are now on active service with the Chinese Air Force, have been promoted to lieutenants.

Johnston In Hospital
J. JOHNSTON, the Police centre-forward, is at present in hospital, but expects to be fit enough for the opening League football game.

Powhattan R.C. Trainer?
I UNDERSTAND that Fusilier Evans, the Interport left-half, may undertake the training of the Powhattan Recreation Club football team this season.

Brooks Forfeiting Football
BROOKS, the Police soccer right-half, will not be playing football this season as he will be taking up cricket instead.

Souza To Keep Goal
U. B. SOUZA, the Interport hockey goalkeeper and Recreio soccer goalkeeper, has consented to keep goal for St. Joseph's until E. M. Marques is available in December.

Lai Gains Popularity
LAI SHIU-WING, the South China "A" inside-right, promises to be the favourite of the Chinese supporters this season. He was in brilliant form at the end of last season and on the present South China tour has been their chief goal-scorer in the absence of Lee Wai-tong owing to injuries. Lai should be a certainty for the next Interport.

Hoddlinott, the Army "B" bowler, will be looking after the Royal Engineers' soccer teams this season.

Navy Soccer Plans
THOUGH the Royal Navy may not compete in the First Division this season, unless the Fleet returns in time, it is understood that they will, nevertheless, play in the Second Division.

Lt. Tomlinson Arrives Back
LIEUT. J. M. TOMLINSON, who represented the Kumanon Rifles in the Soccer League last season, returned to the Colony, after a short absence, by the Empress of Canada.

H.K.C.C. Batting Loss
THE HONG KONG CRICKET CLUB will be without the services of one of their most promising batsmen next season. I. S. Forbes, who played so many excellent innings for their junior team, left the Colony last week.

Harold S. Vanderbilt's successful America's Cup defender, Ranger, the white yacht, is shown above trailing the unsuccessful British challenger, Endeavour II, owned by T. O. M. Sopwith, across the starting line at Newport, Rhode Island, in their first brush, which the American boat won by 17 mins. 5 secs.

THERE are strong rumours prevailing that South China Athletic Association may be very weakly represented in the First Division this coming soccer season as Wong Wing (Wong Ki-leung), Lee Tin-sung, Lau Mau, Fung King-cheong and Tam Kong-pak, who are members of the Canton Police Force, may not be able to obtain leave of absence.

H. K. Area Aquatic Meet
THE Hong Kong Area Sports Board Swimming Secretary, 2 Lt. W. L. Mackintosh, (1/Seaforth H.L.), announces that the annual swimming sports will be held in the European Y.M.C.A. Swimming Pool towards the middle of this month.

PROVIDING there is enough support, a friendly inter-port swimming and diving contest between Shanghai and Hong Kong ladies of all nationalities will be held at the European Y.M.C.A. Swimming Pool next Saturday night. The main events will be broken up by a number of friendly inter-club races. The entire proceeds will be donated to the Refugee Relief Fund.

New Sprint Threat
A NEWCOMER in the Chinese swimming world is Lau Yuk-wing, who participated in the Chung Shing Benevolent Society's Charity Gala last Saturday night in aid of the War Relief Fund. A fine free-style swimmer, he should offer a serious threat to Norman Lee and others next season, as he is not quite mature yet.

Northern Badminton Enthusiast
MISS S. REMEDIOS, who has represented the Shanghai Catholic Club, which at one time won the Mixed Doubles League in the Northern port, is at present in the Colony and is taking the opportunity of keeping herself in practice.

I hear on good authority that Wilfred Lawrence, although out of bed and convalescing from his recent attack of bronchitis, is not likely to be ready for the Colony Swimming Championships, which will probably take place towards the end of this month.

Reward For Perseverence

J. HOLLAND, who played his first game of bowls only a little over a month ago, has practised so assiduously since then that he was selected to represent Kowloon Tong in their match against Civil Service, when the former team registered a record win.

Sportswoman Leaving

ONE of the finest sportswomen in the Colony, Miss Alison Mackenzie, is leaving for England next Saturday by the s.s. Hakone Maru after a stay of some four years in the Colony. During this period she has represented the senior team of the Kowloon Cricket Club at tennis and has been featured in several representative badminton games. She is also a good swimmer and has often ridden at the Equine Sports Club.

Good Hockey Club Talent

WITH the hockey season fast approaching, various clubs are already making arrangements for matches. Hong Kong Hockey Club, the Colony's premier club under the enthusiastic leadership of G. E. R. Dyett, the well-known Internorter, are ascertaining their playing strength and present indications point to a senior team as powerful as any fielded in recent seasons.

Scots Face Ground Problem

I SKINNER of St. Andrew's Ladies' hockey team last season, that her team are not assured of obtaining a ground. It is understood, however, that Rev J. B. Higgs, president of the Club, has the matter in hand and there is every prospect that matters will be satisfactorily arranged.

Middlesex Rugby Talent

IN view of the fact that the Fusiliers are in Shanghai, Rugby enthusiasts will be gratified to learn that the Middlesex Regiment have several fine exponents of the game who will fill gaps in the Army fifteen this coming season. 1/Cpl. A. Lund, the Army all-round athlete, is also a fine Rugby player having represented the Royal Engineers' Training Battalion.

Shanghai Skipper Will Play

MISS Esther Bloomfield, who skinned the last Shanghai Ladies' hockey team which visited the Colony arrived here recently and is expected to turn out for a local combination on the commencement of the season.

J. I. Stephens, the Police P. C. batsman took up bowls about half-way through the season just concluded, and has made such excellent progress that he should be Open Tournament standard by next season.

KOWLOON FOOTBALL

C CLUB have a wealth of goalkeepers as, besides Rowlands of the Fusiliers, they have Boyes, Minihett and Jeffries. The latter is a very promising youngster who, with proper coaching, should go a long way in local football circles.

New K.F.C. Forward

C OAKLEY, the Fusilier First Division forward, has also joined the Kowloon Football Club. He will probably be seen on the right-wing this season.

Lunny Out Of Hospital

F. J. LUNNY, the Hong Kong Electric Recreation Club bowls skip, who has been in hospital for some time, was an interested spectator at the bowls match at Ming Yuen last week.

Army Tennis Player Back

L EUT. J. D. HOLMES, one of the most promising tennis players in the local Garrison, returned to Hong Kong last week after a short absence in the North.

Challenge To Mak

M AI WAI-MING may have to produce his best form in the near future as a newcomer to Chinese swimming has appeared in the person of Sim Hoon-hoon, a well-known Singapore Chinese all-rounder, who is very good over all distances. Sim is likely to join the Mak Neeh Association of Canton.

A. H. Ismail, member of a well-known Hong Kong Indian sporting family, returned to the Colony last Friday following a holiday in Japan.

Jack Rodger's Decision

I AM told by Jack Rodger, still one of the finest hockey defenders in the Colony, that there is very little prospect of him playing the game with any regularity during the coming season. He hopes to maintain touch, however, by acting in an administrative capacity for the Hong Kong Hockey Club.

1938 Police Bowls Loss

THE Police First Division bowls team will be without the services of A. J. Johnson next season as he goes on Home leave late in November and will not be back till after the 1938 season.

Crawley May Not Be Playing

P. D. CRAWLEY, the Civil Service Cricket Club Second Division slow bowler, tells me that he may not be playing cricket this season.

BRITAIN DEMANDS ACTION IN MYSTERY SUBMARINE CRISIS

Swift Steps Follow Vain Attack On H.M.S. Havock

JAPAN'S FAILURE TO REPLY

London, Yesterday. Although the British Government is greatly disappointed that Japan has so far failed to reply to the British protest against the attack on the Ambassador, Sir Hugh Knatchbull-Hugessen, by Japanese planes, it does not intend to ask the Japanese Government to expedite its reply, says the diplomatic correspondent of the "Morning Post."

The correspondent believes that the Japanese reply will probably not arrive in London before early next week.

The Japanese Foreign Minister's warning that Japan would under no circumstances tolerate intervention of other Powers in the Sino-Japanese conflict, and would if the necessity arose, resist attempts in this direction by force, is prominently featured in all the British newspapers. — Trans-Ocean.

WHAT JAPAN DEMANDS OF NANKING

TOKYO, YESTERDAY. ANOTHER DECLARATION TO PRESSMEN ON THE SINO-JAPANESE CONFLICT WAS MADE BY THE FOREIGN MINISTER, MR. KOKI HIROTA, YESTERDAY, IN WHICH HE INDICATED JAPAN'S "DESIRE FOR A CHANGE IN CHINA'S POLICY."

Origin of the present conflict, said Mr. Hirota, must be sought in the encouragement given for political reasons by the Chinese Government to the anti-Japanese movement in China.

By co-operating with Moscow, he alleged, Nanking had openly showed her intention of methodically preparing for war against Japan.

The recent non-aggression pact between Russia and China was especially characteristic of this policy, he declared.

"THE BULWARK"

Mr. Hirota said that Japan, as the "bulwark against Communist invasion of the Far East," could not under these circumstances remain inactive.

He said that Japan, nevertheless, was prepared to recall her troops from China and conclude a pact of friendship, provided that Nanking furnish proof of fundamental change in policy towards Japan.

Until then, Japan was firmly resolved to adhere to the line of conduct which she had drawn up.

Mr. Hirota concluded by affirming that Japan would guarantee the rights of third Powers, and expressed the hope that the Powers would abstain from acts liable to prolong the hostilities. — Trans-Ocean.

SOVIET ARMY MANOEUVRES IN FAR EAST

London, Yesterday. "The large-scale manoeuvres now being carried on by the Soviet Army in the Far East must be regarded as sensational under the present circumstances," says the Riga correspondent of "The Times."

The correspondent points out that it would be an easy matter for Soviet planes participating in the manoeuvres to fly over the border into China. — Trans-Ocean.

Tennis at Venice

The Duke of Windsor, always disposed towards the informal, was even more so while playing tennis on the Lido at Venice recently.

Water Riots In French Morocco

Paris, Yesterday. Fifteen have been killed and over 50 injured in riots in French Morocco which followed the scarcity of water, states the French press.

The water shortage has been made the excuse for stirring up trouble by agitators among the natives.

More than 10,000 natives assembled yesterday morning to protest against the arrest of several of the agitators, who had spread lies that great quantities of water could be made available if the authorities wished.

FOREIGN LEGION CALLED OUT

A detachment of the Foreign Legion and Spahi cavalry were called out to assist the police. They were showered with a hail of stones and, when shots were fired as well, the troops were ordered to charge.

A foreigner, cashier of the waterworks, was later stoned by the mob and his condition is serious. Order was later completely restored. — Trans-Ocean.

London, Yesterday. According to the British Medical Journal, there are now 59,010 registered medical practitioners in Great Britain of whom 6,000 are women. — British-Wireless.

42,000 Casualties In New Saragossa Operations

Saragossa, Yesterday. The fighting on the Aragon front is developing into the biggest battle of the Spanish campaign, declare Nationalist Staff officers.

Infantry and air force are being thrown into the fighting in ever-increasing numbers, and yesterday alone, Nationalist planes dropped over 50 tons of bombs.

The Nationalists admit the Government success at Belchite, a strategically important road junction near Saragossa, where the loyalists have occupied the town after desperate and bloody street fighting.

On the Asturias front, however, the Nationalist troops which captured Bilbao and Santander, are meeting with further success.

FIFTY BRITISH SHIPS IN MEDITERRANEAN

London, Yesterday.

Reinforcement of the British destroyer strength in the Mediterranean and the prospects of the forthcoming discussions between the Mediterranean Powers are the two topics which vied for chief space in to-day's newspapers.

The meeting of all Mediterranean Powers concerned to consider the situation which has arisen in that Sea from the brutal and lawless attacks on shipping by unidentified submarines, has aroused the liveliest interest in London and in official circles the very great importance which the British Government attaches to it is stressed.

Britain favours the beginning of these discussions as soon as possible after the representatives of all the Powers concerned have reached Geneva. It is authoritatively stated that the British Government will have important proposals to make at the meeting.

PARIS TALKS

Paris, Yesterday. Negotiations are still proceeding between Paris and London with regard to preparation of the planned Mediterranean conference, although judging from information received from diplomatic sources, no agreement has yet been reached as to the time and venue of the talks.

M. Yvon Delbos, the French Foreign Minister, had a long talk with Senator Berenger, chairman of the Senate Committee for Foreign Affairs. — Trans-Ocean.

SUBMARINE SIGHTED OFF TURKEY

Istanbul, Yesterday. A submarine of unknown nationality was sighted by Turkish coastguards on the Black Sea, according to a local newspaper.

The paper states that the submarine's conning-tower was clearly recognised and that when the Turkish steamer Vatan approached, the submarine promptly submerged.

Turkish seaplanes immediately took off for the Black Sea in order to search for the mystery craft. — Trans-Ocean.

GERMAN OPINION

Berlin, Yesterday. Opinion in German official circles on the attempted torpedoing of the destroyer H.M.S. Havock is reflected in an article in the semi-official German "Diplomatic and Political Correspondence."

The article says, "British official quarters, by quickly despatching further warships to the Mediterranean, made it clear what significance they attach to this outrage."

"Such determined reaction is in itself entirely comprehensible since the attack on the British destroyer was a grave violation of international law." — Trans-Ocean.

London, Yesterday. At present there are fifty British warships stationed in the Mediterranean.

This is revealed in an official Admiralty statement issued last night, which says that it is an easy matter for Britain to transfer units from the centre to the western Mediterranean. — Trans-Ocean.

ITALIAN ATTITUDE

Rome, Yesterday. Discussing the question of responsibility for the mysterious submarine attacks in the Mediterranean, the Italian press repudiates the charge levelled against Italy and stresses the interest of the Spanish Government to provoke such incidents.

"Messaggero" says that Valencia hopes that one of the mysterious incidents will one day shatter the peace of Europe.

"Popolo di Roma" says that the Soviet alone could derive profit from such incidents.

LEIPZIG REMINDER

The Havock incident was the same as the Leipzig incident, except that a British, instead of a German, vessel was chosen.

The paper accuses Russia of trying to prevent an Anglo-Italian rapprochement, and also of trying to induce France to cast overboard her neutrality and aid Valencia.

The paper says that Italy's chief aim is the re-establishing of friendly relations with Britain. — Trans-Ocean.

GREECE AGREES

Paris, Yesterday. It is reported from Athens that the Greek Government has intimated that it is willing to participate in the proposed Mediterranean Conference.

At the same time, it is stated here that an affirmative reply to the French proposals has also been received from the Turkish Government. — Trans-Ocean.

ITALIAN PARTICIPATION

Rome, Yesterday. The decision of the British Cabinet to strengthen the destroyer fleet in the Mediterranean and to arrange for a conference of Mediterranean Powers, has aroused a great deal of interest in Italy.

First press comments declare that such a Mediterranean conference without Italy but with the participation of Russia, would be regarded as most hostile to Italy.

The papers adopt an attitude of scepticism in discussing the aims and ultimate value of the proposed conference, while the "Sara" dismissed it as a "French manoeuvre designed to disrupt Anglo-Italian rapprochement."

The only reasonable way to improve the situation, says "Ambrosino," is to accord belligerent rights to General Franco. — Trans-Ocean.

LONDON DISCUSSION

London, Yesterday. The French proposal for a Mediterranean conference, accepted by Britain, is discussed by

MUSSOLINI VISIT OFFICIALLY CONFIRMED

Berlin, Yesterday. Breaking the German official silence in regard to reports of the impending visit to Germany of Signor Mussolini, the following communique has been issued:

"The head of the Italian Government, Signor Benito Mussolini, will visit Herr Hitler in Germany at the latter's invitation."

"It is an event of unique and supreme significance that the creator of Fascist Italy and the creator of Nazi Germany will personally meet in this way."

PURPOSE OF VISIT

"The meeting is intended to manifest, and will manifest once more, the close relationship of outlook and fellowship of the tremendous revolutionary movements which have led in both countries to the reshaping of the entire life and outlook of the people."

"The German people, united in Nazism, will feel deep joy at being able to shortly receive the Duce of Fascist Italy on German soil."

NEGOTIATIONS PLANNED

While the exact date of the Duce's arrival is not yet known, it is semi-officially announced that he will spend the second half of September in Germany, and will negotiate with Herr Hitler within the orbit of the policy that has been in existence for some time—the Berlin-Rome axis. — Trans-Ocean.

DUKE AND DUCHESS OF WINDSOR

Vienna, Yesterday. The Duke and Duchess of Windsor have postponed their planned hunting trip to Hungary until further notice.

They are staying at Castle Wasserleoburg, in Carinthia, where ex-King Alfonso of Spain has arrived for a visit lasting several days. — Trans-Ocean.

the London newspapers, which seem to be of the opinion that many difficulties have to be overcome before such a conference can take place.

Much speculation is going on here whether Italy will participate.

A spokesman of the Italian Embassy declares that Italy has not yet officially been approached and could therefore wait for further developments.

Italian participation, the spokesman added, would depend also on the question of who is to be admitted to the conference, and who is not.

RUSSIAN POSITION

In this connection it is interesting to note that some of the British papers state that it was intended to admit Russia to the conversations, though Russia was not to be considered as a Mediterranean Power.

The "Evening Standard" states that representatives of the Valencia Government, for obvious reasons, must not participate in the conference.

Government circles express the hope that representatives of all Mediterranean Powers, including Italy, will take part. — Trans-Ocean.

GOOD TO THE LAST DROP

Democracy has been replaced by the Dictatorship of the Clock.

A CERTAIN confusion prevails regarding this question of industrial progress and its effect upon health.

You cannot have it both ways. You cannot at one moment welcome modern inventions as benefactions, and at the same time complain that they give you nervous breakdowns. You cannot regard each new speed record as a sign of human progress and at the same time complain of the "speed mania." Unless, of course, you think it is the true destiny of civilised man to become a maniac.

Recently the Inspector of Factories said, "Increased death and injury must still be regarded as a penalty to be paid for increased prosperity."

The question before us, therefore, is—Can we get prosperity without having to die for it first? In other words, can we adapt the industrial machine to man, or must we adapt man to the demands of the machine?

Now, of all the articles I have read about the industrial speed-up, hardly any of them question the necessity for it. Almost alone among prominent men, Lord Horder suggests that we "reduce the tempo."

This belief in the necessity of noise and hurry is well expressed in an article before me, which says, "It is impossible to put back the clock of scientific development."

Here we have, clearly stated, the general conviction that, man having started the industrial machine, he is unable to stop it.

The statement may be regarded as the first article of the modern religion, which regards the machine as the master of man's fate.

This is not the first time in the history of religions that men have regarded their own handiwork as an omnipotent deity. Nor is it the first time they have worshipped things originally intended as their servants. They have, for example, frequently worshipped dogs and cows. But modern man is the first to make gods of his gadgets.

Applied to social life, this pious faith clearly indicates the path of social improvement. Having made the industrial machine to suit himself, man must now remake himself to suit the machine.

As a social philosophy it is an advance on the old materialistic determinism, which said that man is moulded to the environment in which he is born. Modern materialism says that man must be moulded to the environment he made himself. In other words—having made the mould, he must then become the blanchmange.

Some of you, still under the influence of the old radical traditions, will object to this idea of democracy being replaced by the Dictatorship of the Clock.

I am afraid, however, that there is no alternative. Some people suggest reducing hours of work in proportion to the speed-up of the machine. But that would be awkward. At the present rate of progress the worker will soon be able to produce in half an hour as much as he now does in a day. This will mean a wages bill about 16 times bigger than it is now.

And where is the money to come from? If democracy cannot put a clock back, it certainly

ONE THING & ANOTHER

CONQUEST follows conquest in the world of scientific research. Steadily the world advances in knowledge, leading us hour by hour to the day when the secrets of the heart shall be disclosed, the laws of nature shall lie before us like an open book, and all that is hidden shall be revealed.

In Chicago, I read, leading professors have spent four years investigating the art of shaving, and have now issued their conclusions. They find that to shave properly a man must wet his chin, rub in the soap, and use a sharp blade.

They have also discovered that any razor, however sharp, is painful when used on a dry beard.

I could devote a whole column to these startling discoveries and their revolutionary effect on social life. But, as a matter of fact, I am contemptuous of the whole thing.

Shaving? Pah! It is the morning exercise of the degenerate, the pastime of an effeminate race. I go round my own firm chin and stiff upper lip every morning with a piece of lighted paper. Then I add the final touch to my rugged features with sandpaper.

For the he-men who prefer this method a friendly tip. The "Daily Testing the citizen's fitness for industry.

ly cannot control its own financial credit.

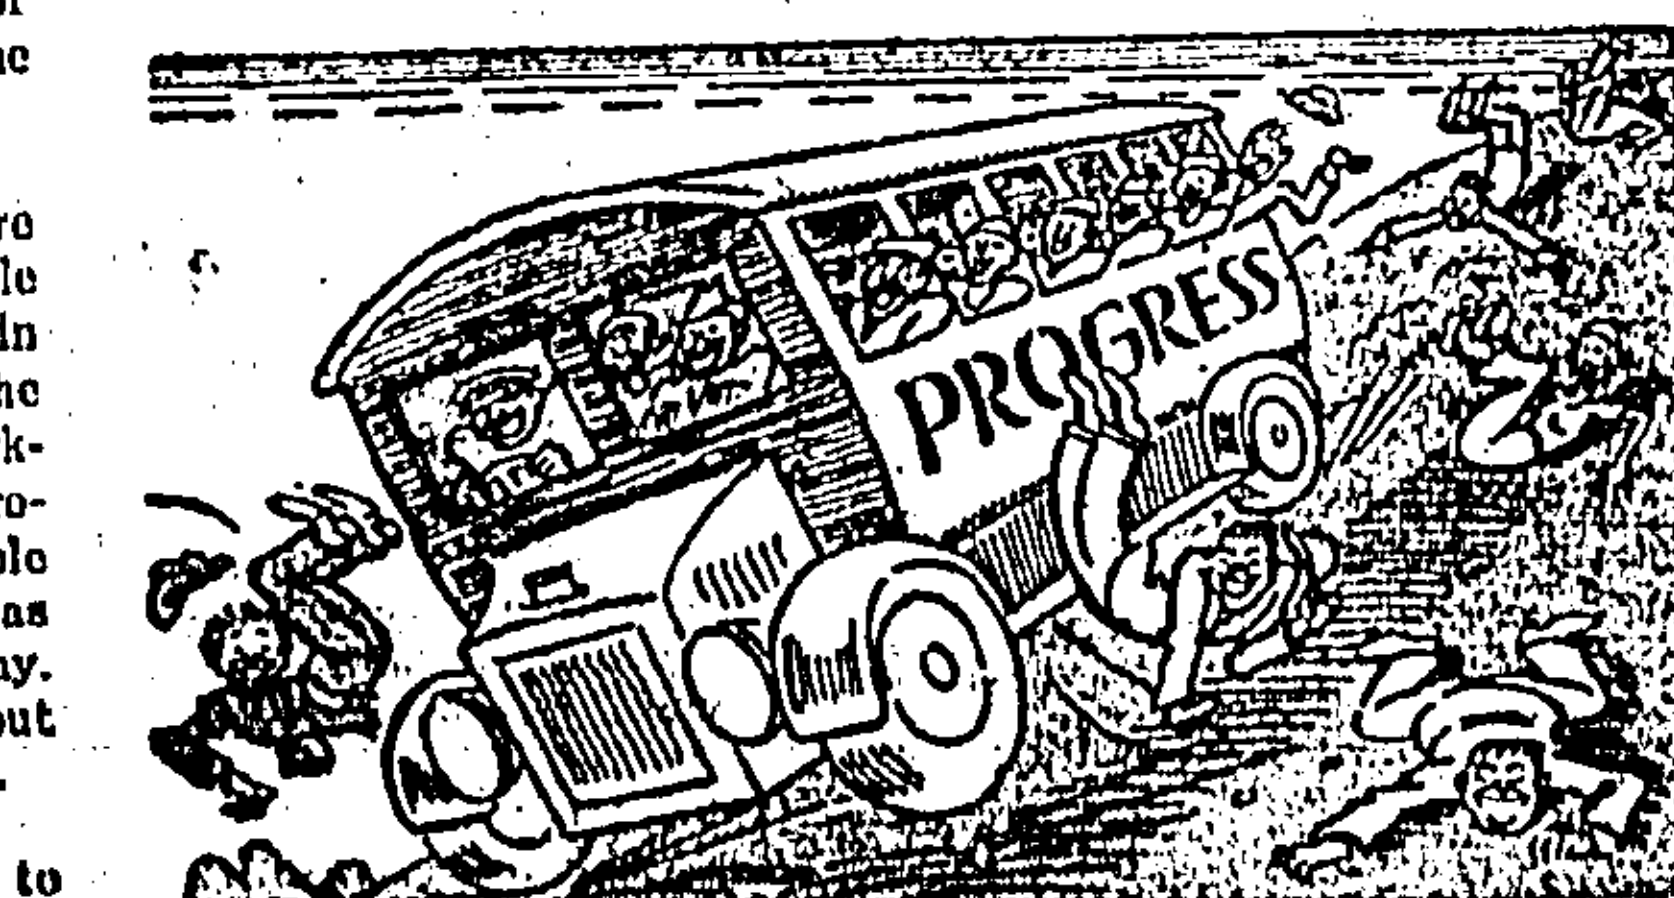

Our only choice is to adapt our nervous systems to the speed-up. We must be prepared to travel at whatever speed the speed-up demands. We cannot determine the speed ourselves.

For since the Clock assumed control of human affairs, modern society finds itself in the position of a sprinter who is forced to do the hundred yards in whatever the stop-watch tells him.

We must gradually reform ourselves until our nerves are made of wire, our stomachs of tin and our intestines of indiarubber. Then we shall have no feelings and no opinions, and we shall all be in tune with the mechanised infinite.

So let us go faster and faster. But do not let us ask where we are going, for that would imply a lack of faith in our god, the Omnipotent Clock.

To those who find that this latest philosophy of life does not make them any happier, but who find, nevertheless, that they are unable to rid themselves of it even with the aid of calomel, I would point out that a number of fine, fat worms await them in the garden. Gentlemen, dinner is served.

Let us go faster and faster, but do not let us ask where we are going.

—, folded with the leading article outside, gives a brighter and hotter flame.

"What Follows Rearmament?" says a headline.

This searching question appears to be the modern version of the eternal problem: "Is there a future life?"

Up to the moment of going to press the oracle is dumb.

I sympathise with Mussolini's annoyance with the Governments that will not recognise Franco. This refusal to recognise people because you object to their behaviour can cause a great deal of inconvenience.

I have in mind the case of the Marquis de Bois Gras, the loyal aristocrat who refused to recognise the French revolutionary Government. The result of his firm devotion to principle was that when they cut off his head he refused to admit that he was dead.

This caused a lot of trouble in heaven. The authorities were unable to determine the status of a man who insisted that he was still a subject of Louis XVI. Finally, for convenience of registration, he agreed to accept the status of Provisional Immortality.

Judging by controversies in the heavy-weight boxing world, it would appear that the custom of not recognising certain fighting men as belligerents has been extended to pugilists.

Captain Elliston, M.P., says that well-to-do people frequently say to him, "Give us servants and we will soon fill our nurseries."

It would appear that ancient patriarchal customs are still followed in the best houses.

I have difficulty in deciding whether my great-grandson, aged ten, is educationally backward or forward. Questioned about what he did in school to-day he replied, "History."

"And did you learn about Boudicca?" he was asked.

"Nope," he replied. "Willis da Conk."

"During 1936 foreign production amounted to 14,000 films, of which England made 217."—U.S. Official Report.

England foreign? Ridiculous! I have had to speak about this sort of thing before.

"Argentina Wants To Buy British," I read. So do the British. They have been wanting to do this for quite a long time.

TYPHOON TIDAL WAVE DISASTER AT TAIPO

Incredible Scene of Havoc and Death

VILLAGE HALF MILE INLAND VIRTUALLY WIPED OUT

TERRIFIED PEOPLE OVERTAKEN RUNNING FROM RUINS

(By a Staff Reporter)

No picture, no turn of phrase can tell the full story of the most startling phenomenon of Thursday's typhoon, the great tidal wave which swept across the Taipo district, a great towering wall of water at least thirty feet high, which rampaged over the seawall at Old Taipo Market, wiped out both Old Market and New Market, crashed inland over low paddyfields, inundated Taipo Hui with fifteen feet of water, and ended its mad career only on reaching the foothills.

I visited the area expecting a grim scene of desolation. Sights which greeted me on every hand I should have regarded as incredible was I not seeing them for myself. More than a hundred bodies had already been recovered from the debris of wrecked houses. Scores were lying about fields, here, there and everywhere.

It will be surprising if the final death-roll is not found to exceed three hundred.

Odd things there were. A gill top-hat looked strange and out of place in a paddyfield, near a coolie victim, and set the imagination working as to how it got there.

High up in the hillside, in a cluster of beautifully green bushes, were two large sampans, lying side by side, as though thus deliberately placed.

The devastated zone suggested a remnants of a battlefield more than anything else.

COMPLETELY RAZED

Old Taipo Market is completely razed. Gangs of coolies, under the supervision of numerous European and Indian Police officers, were the only human beings left alive in what was once a small but active village.

Taipo Market fared little better. Bodies in all sorts of grotesque attitudes were stretched out on the waste land adjoining the Post Office awaiting identification. Police officers, working without rest for long periods, with limited food supplies were digging bodies out of the wreckage and assisting frantic relatives as they rushed to view each new corpse that was brought in.

SHATIN FLOOD

Strangely enough, despite the tales that had been brought into town regarding the terrific damage suffered on the Taipo Road, there was little evidence of anything out of the ordinary in the initial stages of the journey to Taipo.

On Reservoir Hill and along the Road as far as the reservoir, no damage was at all apparent.

On reaching the section of the road running parallel to the railway line at Shatin, it was quite apparent that the sea had swept over a wide area and flood everything to a depth of from 18 to 20 feet.

The road had been converted into a switchback.

RAILWAY UNDERMINED

The railway track has been dangerously undermined, large sections of the embankment having been washed away, but the line seems to have expected serious uprooting.

Hundreds of coolies are busily engaged in repair work, which consists mainly in restoring the embankment, and judging by the progress that already been made, it can confidently be expected that traffic will be resumed within a week or ten days.

First sign of Taipo's havoc was the bridge just before the Causeway. This had suffered a collapse and motor traffic beyond the point was impossible.

Clustered on the inside of the Causeway were a group of stricken fisher-folk. All appeared dazed by the terrors they had survived. Women wept as they sorted the few belongings left them by the storm.

ROWS OF VICTIMS

The tide, then at its lowest, showed wreckage scattered throughout the entire extent of the considerable area exposed. A collapsed garage revealed a badly-crushed fire-tender with a truck buried to its hood in silt, and further along, outside the Post Office, scores of coffins and row after row of bodies, revealed the full extent of the tragedy.

Police officers were working under frightful conditions and the tags placed on bodies and coffins, signifying identification spoke volumes for their labours.

Nearly all the houses in the Market had suffered more or less severely. One row on the sea-front was dreadfully battered, and gaping holes beaten in by wind and wave, allowed uninterrupted vision into the street beyond.

Underneath the bridge leading out of the town, the head of a pig nestled its snout into the bank. No body was visible.

INCREDIBLE SCENES

Taipo Old Market, situated in Taipo Bay at right-angles to the New Market, revealed incredible scenes.

Apart from one or two houses built in the foreign style, the whole village was razed.

Gangs of coolies were working frantically on the ruins in an effort to extract the bodies of victims known to be buried in the ruins. Stretched by the side of a path were the corpses of a male adult, a girl of about seven and in a fairly large laundry basket, a pair of tiny feet revealed the presence of an infant.

GIGANTIC PYRE

A European police officer, supervising the erection of a gigantic funeral pyre for the numerous cattle which had been killed, said he had been working at fever-pitch for more than 32 hours. Owing to the breakdown in communications, he had had little or no food and was near exhaustion point.

"It was undoubtedly a tidal wave that caused all the damage," he said in reply to enquiries. It must have crashed over a fearful wall of water, towering to a height of at least thirty feet.

"The inhabitants of the village must have spent a night of sheer terror. Their huts seemed to have collapsed under the violence of the wind quite early on, and as they went down, the villagers ran terrified towards Taipo Hui, about half a mile inland, well beyond the paddy fields.

OVERTAKEN IN FLIGHT

"They seem to have been overtaken by the tidal wave whilst in flight, for bodies were found strewn all over the fields.

"The wave must have come in with a terrific velocity, sweeping everything before it, smashing down the remains of the houses still standing, leaving behind it nothing but death, and destruction."

From the officer's story and other mute evidence it clear that not until the wave had torn through Taipo Hui, completing its work of devastation and bringing death to scores more, huddled, doubtless, in the darkness, listening to the roar of the wind, but totally oblivious to any threat of death from the sea, half a mile away, was its fury spent, and then only because it dashed itself to pieces against the foothills and settled down, leaving a huge lake, a square mile in area and fifteen feet deep.

Are We Developing A

War Psychosis?

ARE we developing a war psychosis? I think that there is imminent danger of that happening to our minds just now. We read "war", we talk "war", we have "war" served up with breakfast lunch and dinner. It may be an excellent thing to increase the sale of newspapers, this preoccupation with war, but I cannot help but feel that it is definitely bad for our consciousness and our mental life. Why even a great many missionaries are becoming affected by it. The imprecations I have heard uttered upon the Japanese by Christian missionaries, and Americans at that, have driven me back again to my New Testament to discover if I really was deluded by memory in believing that Jesus said, "God is love."

It is so terribly easy to enter upon this condition of thought and consciousness. Even children are capable of it. I remember how we used to be thrilled by wild west films, and ever and always we divided the contending players before our eyes into "the good ones" and "the bad ones"; of course our wishes were always with "the good ones". There is another thing too which I remember about that division—"the good ones" were always those with whose ways and workings our young minds were already familiar, even though the actions they were performing were nothing worse than those at present being carried out by Japan. I cannot remember Britain declaring war upon the inhabitants of what is now Canada!

No Condonation of Japan

I am not condoning Japanese aggression in China one iota when I say what I am now going to say, and that is this—to encourage or to create any feeling against any person or nation which, even though it may appear to righteously merit our disapprobation, will militate against mutual understanding and eventual good-will, is to sin against God and against man, to increase disorder and evil and to fail in goodness and righteousness. It is the duty of every thinking man and woman to-day to realise how difficult it is to establish even crudely, even ostensibly, a respect for Christian, humane ideals, and how terribly easy it is for us and for others to abandon them. Surely it should be self-evident to-day that civilization's only chance of survival is in our unequivocal reassertion and our absolute adherence to every Christian and humane ideal that receives lip-service from the mass of men. And it goes without saying, that, in order to reassert those ideals it is necessary to believe in them, and in some real sense to make the effort to embody them in ourselves.

War Psychosis

War psychosis prevents this reassertion in our minds, it precludes forever the possibility of our practising Christian-humane ideals, for it is a hatred not of evil but of persons, and Christ has told us that he who hates his brother is a murderer, and that there is nothing of eternal value and significance in him. It may be that we have need to evolve a new politics, a new art of relationship, before we can succeed in escaping from this derangement of our consciousness, or from the danger of it, because the formulation of any policies while we are still under its influence is bound to be hampered and misdirected by it.

Most people to-day, for the sake of being thought intelligent perhaps, or for some more valid reason, are grimly determined to be "political", and this determination merely results in the deplorable psychosis which we are discussing, the childish subdivision of men and the world into "the good ones" and "the bad ones", and the ranking of ourselves upon the side with which we are most familiar.

Lagging In Rear of History

People who, still naively believe that it is possible so to divide humanity and nations, to say the least of them, are still lagging in the rear of history. The coming division of the world I believe, and I believe it so thoroughly and utterly that I will risk prophesying—is between those who, first dimly and then more clearly, begin to realise that Evil is omnipresent—in themselves as much as in their enemies, and those to whom this realization is impossible. The day of embattled Good against Evil in the world is passing, and what I as a Christian would call, the day of universal repentance is beginning timidly to break. That does not mean that the last war will not have to be fought, it does not mean that Japanese militarism is going to cease soon from its painful tragic expressions in this part of the world, or that, remembering the militarist regimes in Europe, that universal desolation may not be the appointed condition of new birth. Those things are not susceptible to human judgment. And, as we learn this, we begin to learn what the Christian Faith is.

Of one thing I am certain, our childish war psychosis, is leading us far astray. These are times when those who insist upon knowing, upon being secure of the event of fighting for the Good against the Evil as these appear to their demented minds, will be terribly discomfited. Not that it is not true that there is a Good for which we must fight, but our fighting for this Good must be by struggle in the first place is with ourselves as individual men and women: the simple but terrible struggle not to be deluded into forsaking any of our Christ values, not to be enticed by any sneering of intellectual calculation into doing evil that good may come of it.

Final Responsibility of Every Man

The final responsibility of every man is to his own integrity as a human being. Let that once be compromised and he will be as Othello who listened to the devilleries of Iago; he will end by slaying the thing he loves. And the temptation comes to us to-day through the war psychosis which has affected our minds; it comes in a way which deceives the very elect of the churches. It whispers, "Look at Russia! Look at Germany! Look at Italy! Look at Japan! See what is happening in Spain, and steel yourself to the inevitable!" And men proceed to forget that nothing is inevitable, not even a European or a world war; nothing is inevitable except the outcome of steeling yourself to the inevitable.

The day has come when we must look within our own lives to discover what is threatening the peace and well-being of the world, for in our hearts alone lies the source of the Evil which, if unresisted, will destroy us. All this may sound very remote from the threatening of the present situation around us. It would become more real to us if we could take a more imaginative view of modern history, and see it as the period of the rise into spiritual authority of the concept of the nation.

Asks The Rev. J.D. MacLean

Dogma To Which We Do Reverence

It is hard for us to do this because by the dogma to which we do reverence, the conception of the self and the rights of the self, which the majority of us have come to hold, the idea of the nation and the idea of spiritual authority are unreal. Increasingly for us there are no nations, but only international economic units and classes, and as for spiritual authority, it is not acknowledged except in some inexplicable economic tangles. Nevertheless, the pre-eminent psychological and political fact of the modern world is that the nation has taken (or usurped) the authority of God. The Socialist sees one half of this truth. He sees that that national authority is incompatible with an international economy; and that the continuity of civilisation demands the creation of an effective international authority. But his belief that the new international authority can be created by disrupting the nation internally, by violence is mad. Leaving aside all other considerations, internal violence aimed against a modern nation is bound to be self-defeating.

But the Socialist internationalism is the only alternative before the world. It is the only formulated plan which is presented wherein there is a way of escape from the psychosis of war, and it is being strangled by the progress of events. Indeed that seems to be the fate in store for any immediate policies which are formulated, their formulation merely result in a forlorn padding after the irrevocable happening. For internationalism and those who are on the side of it are not the only "good ones", nor are nationalists the only "bad ones." The world as we remarked earlier is not so easily divided into Good and Evil.

Division of Good And Evil

The division of Good and Evil begins in our own lives, and it is there that sides must be taken, it is there that we must use all our force to conquer whatever is the enemy of Good, and the greatest, indeed only the only real force at our disposal for that warfare inside the self, is the power of the love of God dwelling in us through the revelation and life of Christ. Self judgment must precede all others if any other is to be validly and effectively made and expressed.

In any self-examination honestly carried out this element of irrational hate, which is what a war psychosis amounts to, will be, is bound to be, detected. It must be uprooted, and its immediate uprooting is more urgently needed of us than the quelling of aggressive enemy powers, for if it continues within us, to grow and increase in power, we shall cease to behave as human beings and become as men mad in their hearts, in danger of acting, and acting with mad injustice and hatred towards others. It is from that heart of man that all evil proceeds, therefore we must guard our hearts and set a watch upon them. It is out of our lives that the new Asia, the new Europe, the new world, is to be created, and if the coming age is not to be poisoned at its very roots, if it is to rise irresistibly to the highest spiritual achievements, we must be clean of hate, and made strong in love.

A Point Of View On The Hugessen Incident

[To The Editor "Sunday Herald"]
Sir,—Under the above caption, in your issue of last week, there appears a letter signed "British Observer."

As I find it difficult to comment with the degree of restraint which editors so assiduously endeavour to inculcate into the minds of their correspondents, I must perforce be content to be just plain funny. It has invariably proved successful in replying to persons suffering from elephantiasis of the cranium.

"British Observer" tell us that he has a London board of directors and on whose behalf he exercises the utmost vigilance when negotiating his important business.

"British Observer" agrees whole-heartedly with the Japanese contention that H.B.M.'s Ambassador ought previously to have advised the Japanese of his intention to take a joy-ride into the interior of a country with which the Japanese are not at war. From this morning's paper it is clear that the British Government and Press do not share his views, but perhaps they do not have the advantage of a competent London board of directors. As I do not consider "British Observer" is in the appropriate frame of mind to indite a suitable letter to the Japanese I take the liberty of suggesting, to those who think of proceeding into the byways of China, the following form of advice:—

General Jimbo Jumbo.
Sir,—As Ambassador-at-large for Chowhant, bei Wigan, it is my pleasurable duty to advise you that on the 1st April I intend to proceed into the interior for the purpose of inspecting the flora and fauna of this vast country. My car will be one of the new "Can't-a-Ford" and will be driven by Captain McFloodsmon. Your sharpshooters will be easily able to recognize me by the Union flag, embroidered on the seat of my nether garment, by the local Girl Guides. Captain McFloodsmon will wear the family sporrans which was worn at the battle of Bakerloo by his maternal grandmother, and which may be further distinguished by the fact that it's starboard side shows signs of moth.

Nothing Equals 'ASPRO' for Dengue & Rheumatism

Selly's Estate, Ingham, North Queensland.
Dear Sirs,
Having used your 'ASPRO' for Dengue Fever and also for Rheumatism, I have found that nothing equals 'ASPRO' for relief from pain. I was very bad the last week in December, and only got sleep with Rheumatism in my legs. A neighbour called to see me, and she told me that 'ASPRO' Tablets were good for pain. I straightaway went to the chemist for a box of 'ASPRO', and I can honestly say that I was surprised at the relief I got after taking the first two 'ASPRO' Tablets—they took away the pain and I could sleep of a night. I took three Tablets a night for four nights, and they relieved me, and now I am as well as ever.
Yours faithfully,

'ASPRO' Works Wonders for Malaria

Gladstone, Queensland.
Gentlemen,
I think it is up to me to let you know how I have benefited by 'ASPRO'. Ever since 1910 I have been a sufferer to MALARIA FEVER, having contracted same in Rhodesia, German East Africa and the Straits Settlements.
I came to Australia from the latter country five years ago, and for the first two and a half years was continually in hospital in Victoria and New South Wales. On arriving in Queensland, a friend advised me to try 'ASPRO'. I did, and I am now cured. I still continue to get slight attacks of Malaria, but And I take a few 'ASPRO' Tablets and hot lemon water, and rest a few hours, I am quite O.K. again. I wouldn't be without 'ASPRO' for anything and always carry a box about with me. I can thoroughly recommend them to anyone suffering from the same malady.
This testimonial is unsolicited and you may make any use of it that you think fit.
Yours faithfully,

AUSTRALIAN CRACK REPORTED UNFIT

GETTING READY FOR RACING AT HAPPY VALLEY BEAR CLAW LOOKS IN GOOD CONDITION

(By "The Judge")

FOLLOWERS of the turf will be pleased to know that the First Extra Race Meeting after the Summer interval will definitely be held on Saturday, September 25. The ponies have benefitted considerably from their rest and freedom from strenuous training, and it will be a matter of interest to know that, in spite of the severity of last Thursday's typhoon, the grass track has not been affected to any great extent. As a result of careful nursing, it is now in splendid condition.

From what I have been able to see during morning gallops, I am rather pleased with the appearance of Double Finesse, which is fighting it. It should account for one or two wins over short distances.

I understand that Holiday Eve, the crack Australian owned by the Sassoon Stable, died recently.

It will be recalled that Holiday Eve, ridden by Mr. S. L. Yuen, gave a sterling display against Strathroy on the second day of the Second Extra Race Meeting over the two mile post distance. The result of which ended in the record for this distance being shattered.

Strathroy Not Fit?

It is rumoured that Strathroy has not weathered the summer any too well, and that it is at the moment suffering from some kind of skin trouble, which is hindering its training progress.

Lancashire Chips and quite a number of the Australian ponies are looking well, and more will be heard of them later.

Among the old China Griffins, I rather like the look of Bear Claw, which has been kept in concert pitch, and its return encounter with King's Warden, which has yet to show more improvement in training, will be keenly looked forward to.

Expansion Time, second in this year's Derby, is not quite sound in appearance, but as regards the ponies belonging to the Sassoon Stable nothing whatever is known, as their training is conducted at Fanling, far from the public gaze. It may be confidently stated, however, that under the expert handling of Dr. L. Reidy, the ponies from this stable will need watching.

Inevitable Trio

Among the Subscription Griffins, the majority of which have only been allowed to do slow training, I can say that, as hitherto, the best are Gordito, Rose Evelyn and Wild Cat, and the meeting of these three stalwarts at a later meeting will provide one of the best contested events to be seen for a long time.

Regarding the jockeys, it is regretted that Mr. F. Marshall, the Shanghai crack, will probably not be available, as he returned to Shanghai despite a report that he had decided to make Hong Kong his headquarters. He will no doubt be seen in action again during the Annual Race Meetings next year.

I believe that Mr. Norman Deitz has fully recovered from the injury which he sustained in Shanghai, and there is every reason to expect that he will be riding again shortly.

Mr. H. C. Pih recently returned from a holiday in Shanghai, and, with the usual number of local jockeys, augmented by fast improving novices, I expect owners will generally be well served again in the jockey department.

Colony Tennis Aces On View This Week

(By "REFEREE")

Several interesting matches in the Colony's first Hardcourt Tennis Championships, now being held under the auspices of the United Services Recreation Club, will be witnessed on their courts at King's Park during the coming week.

Probably the most interesting encounter in the singles will be the first appearance of E. C. Fincher on Wednesday, when he meets G. E. Clarke. I hear, however, that Fincher is on the sick list at the moment any may have to scratch.

Wednesday will also mark the first appearance of Taul-Wai-pui since his return from his European visit, and he and W. C. Hung should beat Dr. A. M. Rodrigues and H. A. Barros, of Recreio.

H. D. Rumjahn, the present Colony singles (grass courts) champion, also makes his first appearance on Wednesday, against Lui Kwai-fan, and, judging from his performance last Friday in a doubles match, he should win comfortably.

The week's fixtures are as follows, Friday's programme having yet to be arranged:

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8
Court No. 12 Major MacDonald and A. N. Other v. G. Choa and J. W. Leonard.

Court No. 13 G. E. Clarke v. E. C. Fincher.

Court No. 15 Lui Kwai-fan v. H. D. Rumjahn.

Court No. 16 Dr. A. M. Rodrigues and H. A. Barros v. W. C. Hung and Taul-Wai-pui.

Court No. 17 F. H. Kwok and S. W. Liang v. F. R. Zimmern and A. N. Other.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 9
Court No. 12 H. Y. Ho v. J. L. F. Smalley.

Court No. 13 Major MacDonald v. Chan Kam-moon.

Court No. 14 E. C. Fincher and G. Bodiker v. S. A. Gray and A. Crawford.

Court No. 15 A. E. P. Guest v. Y. C. Lau.

Court No. 16 Iu Tak-cheuk and Wong Shui-wing v. E. F. Fincher and D. J. N. Anderson.

Court No. 17 M. A. Oliveira v. I. M. A. Razack.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 10
A. V. Remedios and J. Gonsalves v. E. C. Fincher and G. Bodiker or S. A. Gray and A. Crawford.

R. R. Todd and G. E. R. Divett v. Iu Tak Cheuk and Wong Shui Wing or E. F. Fincher and D. J. N. Anderson.

W. C. Hung v. G. Choa.
A. L. Sullivan and L. Goldman v. F. H. Kwok and S. W. Liang or F. R. Zimmern and A. N. Other.

S. A. Rumjahn v. H. Y. Ho or L. J. F. Smalley.

A. E. P. Guest or Y. C. Lau v. M. A. Oliveira or I. M. A. Razack.

If matches scheduled for any day have to be postponed owing to the weather they will be played on the first following day which is fit for play and schedules for succeeding days' play will be altered accordingly.

'Y' BATH IN DEMAND
In view of the fact that the North Point Bathing Clubs have been demolished, there is every prospect of the Public Works Department Recreation Club's annual swimming sports being held in the European Y.M.C.A. Swimming Pool, sometime towards the middle of the month.

ANDERSON WINS —TITLE & MISS PERRY IN FINAL

D. J. N. Anderson, well-known cricketer, won the Junior Tennis Championship of the Kowloon Cricket Club yesterday when he beat W. M. Gitting by 6-2, 6-3, 6-3 in the final round.

Paster on the court and varying his pace cleverly, Anderson, who plays for the "B" Division League team, proved much too good for his "C" Division opponent, although the latter put up a very plucky fight.

Miss Rose Perry, who recently returned from a holiday in the North, entered the final of the Ladies' Championship when she beat Miss A. Mackenzie 6-3, 6-1.

Miss Mackenzie led 4-2 in the second set, but Miss Perry, throwing all reserves into the game, took the next four games in a row for set and match.

Miss Perry will meet Mrs. G. C. Burnett in the final and is confidently expected to succeed Miss M. Griffiths, who is on home leave, as the K.C.C. lady champion.

HENKEL OUT IN 4 SETS

MAKO AND JONES ALSO BEATEN

Forest Hills, Yesterday.
The first day's play in the American Lawn Tennis Championships produced one surprising upset, H. Henkel, the newly crowned German champion, losing to an unknown in four sets. Outstanding results were as follows:—

Martin Buxby (U.S.A.) beat H. Henkel (Germany) 5-7, 6-1, 6-4, 6-4.

Robert Riggs (U.S.A.) beat Gene Mako (U.S.A.) 2-6, 6-3, 6-4, 7-5.

G. T. Hunt (U.S.A.) beat C. M. Jones (Britain) 6-0, 6-3, 6-3.—Reuter.

Let's make some Fairy Tale tarts

IT IS DONE LIKE THIS

PASTRY
1 1/2 cups Simpson's Self-Raising Flour
1/2 cup shortening, milk or water to mix
1 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 cup light brown sugar
1 cup raisins
1/2 cup currants, one-third cup dried.

Mix flour and salt. Cut in shortening until evenly flaked throughout. Add milk or water—only enough to bind mixture. Roll out on lightly floured board. Cut into rounds that will fit shallow tart tin. Prick holes, cut into slight flange around edge. Bring all other ingredients to boil. Add raisins. Simmer until tender. Remove from heat and pour into tart tin. Cover with a lid. Bake in slowly oven 1 1/2 hours. Turn out on a plate with a little water. Cook syrup until it thickens. Arrange tarts in ungreased tart tin. Pour one tablespoon syrup in each tart. Cut remaining pastry into strips. Lay in a cross over each tart. Moist edges and press into underparts. Bake in hot oven 15 minutes, or until crust is browned. Serve with cream.

Junior Soccer Prospects

(By "REFEREE")

Keen competition among the Second Division teams of the Hong Kong Football League is promised this season as most of the teams will be evenly matched until players are required to fill vacancies in the senior teams.

The Royal Navy, whose participation in the Senior Division is still doubtful, should be again one of the leading teams in this Division, but up to the moment they are unable to give any estimate of their strength owing to the absence of the Fleet.

Most of last year's players have left for Home or will be doing so shortly.

The Royal Engineers, winners of the Junior Shield for three years in succession, will this season have to depend entirely on last year's Third Division team as all their best players have left for Home, while Hurst, their pivot, is at present in Shanghai and Howlett has joined the Police.

There are several newcomers who are reported to be quite good.
Sox and Radcliffe and Tudor are among these.

The latter played in the Third Division at centre-half in the latter part of last season, while Land, who played for England and the Army, will also be playing, unless he is snapped up by the hockey or cricket sections. Dewell, who played at right-back, and Jones, a half-back, should also make the team. As soon as practice games are held it will be possible to unearth new talent among the Sappers, I am told.

Club's Position

Though the Club have lost a number of their First Division players they are fortunate in having at their disposal a number of players who did well in the Second Division last season.

The team did as well as could be expected last season, when they had to supply players for the first team for the greater part of the season, and the majority of last year's team will be seen playing this season. Dr.
Shaw will figure in the centre forward, while P. Wilson and Millington, if the former is not required for the first team, will probably be the backs.
Stephens will probably keep goal and, with a little more experience, should become a useful reserve for the senior team.

The Club will miss Milne, last year's skipper and pivot who is on Home leave and who was to have been married yesterday, and his position will be hard to fill satisfactorily.

The Club are well served in the forward line as they will have Stone as their centre forward, with Fisher and E. Fowler as inside forwards.

These three played together for the greater part of last season. Sloan will probably be seen on the left wing, but he too may be wanted for the first team, while Hunsworth will
Skinner and C. Sloan are also available.

Eastern's Strength

That Eastern will be much stronger in this Division than they were last season is evident by the fact that several of their First Division players will be seen among the juniors
this season, among whom are Ng Ying-kai and Lai Ting-chai. The latter, in spite of his lack of height, was their outstanding back last season and his successor in the senior team must be very good indeed. Ng Ying-kai figured in the intermediate line of the seniors last season, while another demoted player is Leo Bing long a forward. Apart from these and Leo Wai-lam and A. Asim the rest of the team will be composed of newcomers.

Young Pan-wai will be leading the line with Tsang Wai and Koo Kwok-chai supporting him.
These three have been playing together during the summer in the small ball league.

(By "SKIP")

THE First round of the Gutierrez International Shield competition takes place this afternoon, when two matches are to be played at Club de Recreio and two at Craighengower.

The full draw, together with the selected teams, is as follows:

Philippines—A. E. Castro, F. X. Delgado, V. N. Atienza, R. Basa (Skip).

versus

Malaya—A. Bakar, M. R. Abbas, M. Y. Adal, A. R. Dallah (Skip).

versus

India—D. M. Khan, A. R. Minu, A. M. Omar, U. M. Omar (Skip).

versus

China—H. S. Hsu, J. N. Wong, Dr. C. W. Lam and J. Pau (Skip).
at Club de Recreio at 3.30 p.m.

Ireland—H. Lockhart, W. Mulcahy, N. J. Bebbington, J. Cavanagh (Skip).

versus

England—S. A. Bright, S. Randle, A. W. Grimmitt, J. Hollidge (Skip).

Scotland—W. L. Walker, R. G. Craig, A. Hyde Lay, J. McKelvie (Skip).

versus

Portugal—L. F. Xavier, A. A. Remedios, R. F. Luz and H. A.
Alves (Skip).
at Craighengower Cricket Club at 3.30 p.m.

The first game should prove a very interesting and close one.
Malaya appear to have a slight advantage in the first half of the team, with the respective threes and skips just about on a par, and I think that they should win by about half a dozen shots, Dallah's forcefulness probably proving the turning point.

It is quite an event to see China entering a team, and the experience will serve them in good stead.
Without wishing to discourage them in any way I must predict a win for their opponents whose quartette appears very strong with U. M. Omar the keystone. Both Hsu and Jimmy Wong, have turned out regularly for the Kowloon Tong Club, whilst Pau is a steady performer in the Craighengower junior team, but I am afraid they are not quite up to first class standard yet.

The better programme is at the Valley. Ireland have a fairly useful team and their selectors have the good fortune to have only five players to choose from, giving them a much easier task than the representatives of some of the other countries.

VITAL TENNIS GAME NEXT WEDNESDAY

To-morrow being a Bank Holiday, the first matches this week in the Hong Kong Tennis League will commence next Tuesday with two "A" Division games.

There are only three matches down for decision next Wednesday in the "B" Division, the clash between Chinese Recreation Club and Craighengower providing the main feature of the week's tennis, as the winners will carry off the divisional trophy.

This week's programme of League matches, as authorised by the Hon. League Secretary, are as follows:—

TUESDAY
"A" Division
H.K.U.T.C. v U.S.R.C.
K.C.C. v I.R.C.
WEDNESDAY
"B" Division
H.K.U.T.C. v S.C.A.A.
G.R.C. v C.C.C.
H.K.C.C. v Recreio
THURSDAY

C.R.C. (1) v R.T.G.C.A.
C.R.C. (2) v I.R.C.
C.C.C. v Recreio
FRIDAY
"D" Division
C.R.C. v P.R.C.

INDIAN HOCKEY STRENGTHENED

With the arrival very shortly of the Rajputana Rifles, which will strengthen the local Garrison in the absence in the North of the Royal Welch Fusiliers and the Royal Ulster Rifles, Colony hockey will be given a fillip. The newcomers and the K.H.S.R.A. should place India on top this coming season in the local International Tournament.

one I cannot say that I agree with the composition of the team, a view which I know is shared by many players.

One radical mistake which I think has been made is in not putting Randle as skip.

He is playing just as well as he did last year, when he carried the team to victory (aided by C. S.
Summons, W. E. Hollands and A.
W. Grimmitt), and if he had to be picked this year I feel that he ought to have been given the major position and an opportunity to defend his title.

Though Hollidge can be brilliant at times, and often is, he has not the confidence which my nominee has nor, I am afraid, has he the entire confidence of his rink, which is essential. Grimmitt was No. 3 last year and possibly deserves his place, but I would have preferred
B. W. Bradbury. I'll let it go at that. In any case I think that the team can't beat Ireland by a small margin.

Scotland's Hard Task

The best match of the round is undoubtedly that between Portugal and Scotland. Here again I disagree with the selectors in one or two respects. McKelvie picked himself as skip, but I am not entirely in agreement with the other selections. Had Watson (first reserve for the place) been playing lead all the season I think he would have walked into the team, but it may have been thought that skipping a Third Division team has put him off his game. I do not wholly agree. J. Gellatly has been playing very well at No. 2 for the Civil Service and must have received serious consideration, but I think Craig may justify his selection. I hear that A. Hyde Lay may not be able to turn out, in which case J. C. Brown will no doubt take his place.

Portugal have a very strong four and if Luz strikes form—it evaded him somewhat last week — they should win. Remedios was a tower of strength against Switzerland, and I think that the King's Park team will again be glad of his assistance as he is right at the top of his game this year.

WOMEN SHOULD NOT RETURN TO SHANGHAI

His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government has received the following telegram from Mr. J. W. O. Davidson, His Majesty's Consul-General at Shanghai:

"In view of enquiries received here it is the opinion of the Commander-in-Chief, the Brigadier and myself that, while there is no objection to British men with employment returning to Shanghai, it is premature to consider any return of women and children, and I hope that the co-operation of British shipping companies at the ports concerned will be enlisted to this end."

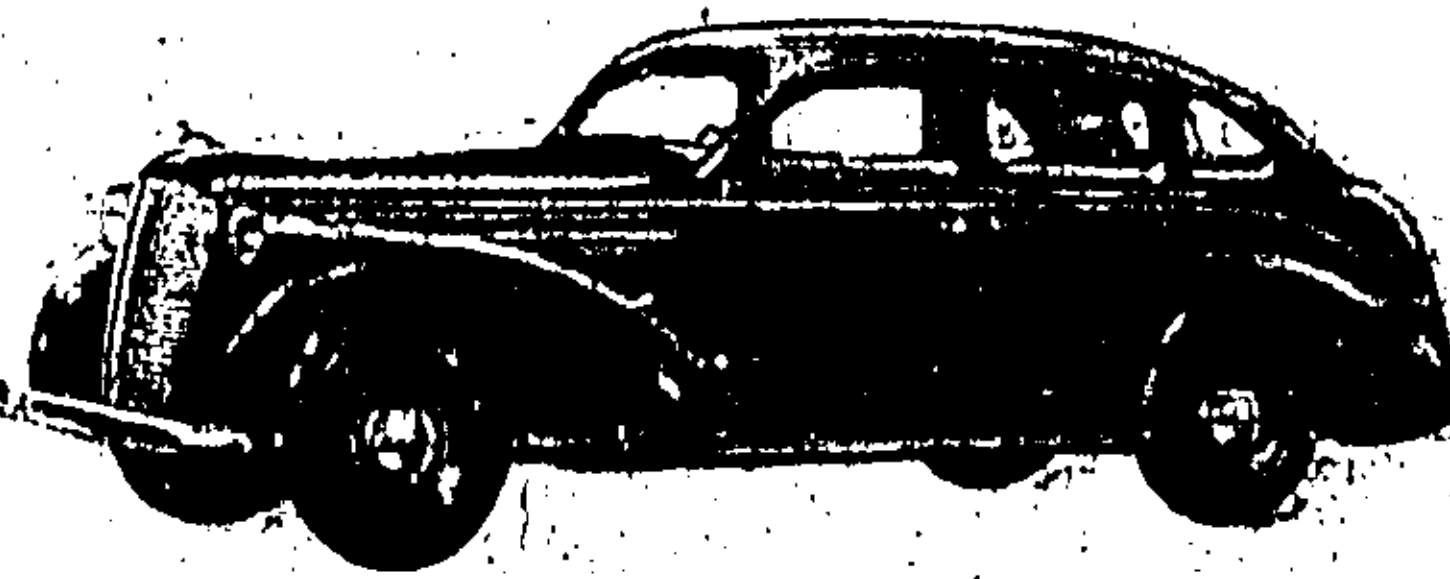

The Director of Education informed the "Sunday Herald" yesterday that everything possible is being done by his department and by the Refugee Committee regarding the transfer of the present occupants of the C.B.S. building at the earliest possible date.

He also states that owing to the late start of term, caused by the present circumstances, the Christmas and Easter Vacations will be curtailed so that the number of days in the School Year, 1937-8, will approximate to the usual total.

When further questioned, the Director said he hoped to have the school opened by the 20th or at the latest, the 27th.

HOSKING'S AMAZING FEAT AT LAST HEAD

The Indian Recreation Club took no chances yesterday in their vital Second Division Lawn Bowls League game against the Kowloon Cricket Club at Sookunpoo and as a result they won with 29 shots to spare and thus carried off the divisional championship for the second time in the history of the I.R.C. and secured promotion to the Senior Division.

It was just as well the Indians won as Craigengower, only a point in arrears, also won handsomely to become runners-up.

The First Division situation remained unchanged and the championship will be decided next Sunday when Reereio and Craigengower, the 1936 winners, entertain Kowloon Dock and Civil Service respectively in their last fixture of the season. Reereio are two points in the lead and Craigengower can only hope for a play-off.

U. M. Omar, with a 32-13 win over the previously unbeaten G. Perkins, carried off the senior skips' championship.

SEAFORTHS WEAKENED

PLAYERS LEAVING FOR HOME

That the Seaforts would this season be one of the leading teams in the First Division was the general opinion of all followers of soccer in the Colony last season and many will regret to learn that a number of the Regiment's senior players will be leaving for home on the first troopship and therefore, though the reserves from the second team may fill their places satisfactorily, there will not be that combination and understanding which featured their play last season.

The Seaforts have already suffered a great loss at centre-forward. Miller was injured in a representative game last season and, though he has recovered from his injuries, it is understood that he will soon be undergoing an operation for the removal of a cartilage, while Williamson, the Army left-half, is still suffering from an injured ankle, although he hopes to be fit by the end of the month. Thompson, the goalkeeper, and Ayres, the right-winger, are due for home by the next troopship, while Cook, the right-half, is expected to leave in February. Webster and Steele, the two backs, will be available, with McKusker in the pivotal position. In the forward line Adams, Higgs and McGuigan will be seen in their original positions. The latter is one of the finest inside-lefts in the Colony, and it will be very surprising if he does not figure very prominently in all representative games this year.

Wide Variety of Attractive Dishes that Cost but Little to Make

Have you been giving desserts the attention they deserve in planning your daily menu? They really are worth your best efforts, for few dishes please the family as much as a sparkling new dessert, and few things are so easy to prepare.

If you've been thinking that desserts mean lots of work, these recipes will change your mind. Any of these desserts can be prepared in a few minutes, and they are guaranteed to win the approval of the entire family, from that hard-to-please husband of yours right down to the smallest and noisiest member of the household.

Let's start with a fruit dessert:

Two-Toned Orange Mould

1 package Orange Jell-O

1 pint warm water

2 oranges, sections free from membrane, and sliced

1/2 cup cottage cheese

Dissolve Jell-O in warm water. Chill.

When slightly thickened, fold oranges into 1/2 of Jell-O mixture, and turn into individual moulds; chill until firm. Mash cheese; add to remaining slightly thickened Jell-O and blend. Pour over firm Jell-O in moulds. Chill until firm. Unmould. Serves 6.

If you have no fresh fruits handy, try this one:

Jellied Ginger Grape

1 package Strawberry or Lemon Jell-O

1 cup warm grape juice

1 cup ginger ale

Dissolve Jell-O in warm grape juice. Cool and add ginger ale. Turn into moulds. Chill until firm. Unmould. Serves 4.

For an appetizer, turn Jell-O mixture into shallow pan; chill until firm. Cut in cubes or break into bits with fork; pile in low cups or cocktail glasses. Garnish with small clusters of white, seedless grapes and set cups in shallow bowls of shaved ice, or place each cup on fresh grape leaf on plate. Serves 6.

Or, if you want a dessert for a real occasion, why not serve:

Fruit Pudding

1 package Cherry Jell-O

1 pint warm water

1/2 teaspoon salt

1/2 cup chopped seedless raisins

12 dates, chopped

6 figs, chopped

1 banana, sliced

1/4 cup chopped nut meats

Dissolve Jell-O in warm water. Add salt. Chill. When slightly thickened, fold in fruits and nuts. Turn into moulds. Chill until firm. Unmould. Serve plain, or with whipped cream. Serves 6.

When you're making fruit or nut desserts with Jell-O, remember that some fruits sink in Jell-O, while others float. If you use the right combination, the fruits will arrange themselves in layers. As a general rule, tinier fruits sink in the mould, and fresh fruits float. Nuts, marshmallows, etc., also float. So add the right fruits the right way and your Jell-O desserts will be more attractive than ever!

A STRING OF BEADS

Even the most intellectual of women retain a certain train of the uncivilized

These beads are different anyway. You've got to admit that," Phillip Crawford said.

"They're lovely, dear. Thanks as much," Beth said. "They look nice, with this dress, don't they?" She walked across the room and stood before a long mirror. Then she held the string of crudely cut Mexican jadeite beads up to her neck.

Phillip stood back a few paces and smiled at the girl he was in love with. He thought the beads were beautiful against the yellow woad of her dress. The primitive, irregular, heavy stones of the necklace seemed to him to belong with her strongly chiseled features, with the thick auburn hair and the braid running across the top of her head, the strong chin and the curled upper lip with its suggestion of down.

"You look like an Aztec princess," Phillip said.

The girl walked over to him, taking the beads from her neck. She looked at him thoughtfully for a minute. "They weren't hers, were they?" Beth asked.

"No, I bought them myself," Phillip said. He was silent a moment, then spoke again, hesitantly. "But she'll probably make a fuss about them. She has about everything else. But I'd rather you had them than anybody in the world, especially if you like them."

"Fasten them on for me," Beth asked, holding the beads out in her hand. He tied the heavy cord on which the beads were strung, in a bow knot at the back of her neck. He put an arm over her shoulder and kissed her lightly on the forehead.

"I don't care if she is upset, the beads are yours," he said.

She was Phillip's wife who had sailed to France when she learned that he and Beth had fallen in love. Before that time, she had been apart from Phillip for over a year, seeing him at intervals, and then only for long enough to review for his benefit the ten years of their married life. Before Beth came on the scene she had been miserable for her by Phillip's complete lack of understanding of her sensitive female temperament.

Beth loosened herself from Phillip's arm and danced back to the mirror, humming a popular song. As she looked at herself in the glass she clasped her hands together and laughed softly. "They're mine," she said.

Phillip sat down in a chair. He wondered if he had been wise to give Beth the beads. His wife might decide to claim them as her own. Several years before he had bought three feet of jadeite beads from a drunken Indian at a Mexican fiesta. The Indian had dug them up near an old pyramid. Out of his purchase his wife had made five necklaces, had given two to close friends and kept three for herself. She had left this string behind, it was no more desirable than her others, Phillip reasoned. And he had bought five strings, why shouldn't he have at least one, now that they had split up. Of course I should, he thought.

He had heard Beth say, "They're mine," but almost a minute went by before he finished his reasoning process. Then he looked up and saw her standing in front of him. He was sure no one was more beautiful than Beth and the beads did look good on her.

Three months later he got a letter from his wife, who was back in New York again. "Even though you have said the New York place is mine, I want legal papers drawn up at once. I want you to send me immediately . . . Then followed a long list of personal and household things. The letter ended, 'I want you to send me that other string of Mexican beads immediately. That is, unless your new little toy has gobbled them up. I'll expect to have them within one week. And as for a divorce, I've changed my mind. You can live with your little trollop and if you want children, you can go ahead and raise a litter for all of me. But I'll not give you a divorce. You have done nothing for me all my life, I'll do the same for you. And I warn you to send those beads immediately.'

Phillip read the letter as quietly as he could. Beth stood across the room, impatient to know its contents. Phillip started putting it back in the envelope. Beth smiled at him and walked slowly across the room, one hand stretched out toward Phillip, the fingers of the other placed at her mouth.

"Let me see, please," she asked. "It's nothing," Phillip said. "She just wants me to send the steamer rug and some linen that belongs in the house in the city. There's no reason for you to read it. Why do you want to bother, dear?"

"Well, if it's nothing, please? There's no reason I shouldn't. Is there? Please? I think she said something else. There's something you don't want me to see. If there wasn't you would let me read it."

"Oh, all right, here it is," Phillip pulled the letter from the envelope, spread out the two pages and handed it to Beth.

It took her about three seconds to read the letter. "She can't have those beads, Phillip. You gave them to me," Her hand went to her neck and the outstretched fingers covered the front of the necklace. "She can't have them. She has others. I want those beads and I'm going to have them."

"All right," Phillip said. "If they're that important to you, keep them. It'll probably mean a battle with her, but that's all right with me. Only you know yourself it would be better to calm her down a little. You know how upset she gets about the least little thing. Now those beads aren't worth making a fuss about. I'll get you some beads ten times as nice as those."

"No, Phillip, I want these beads. Let her make a fuss. She tries to make an issue out of everything she can think of. I'm going to make an issue of these beads," Beth said.

"It will just make her all the more upset. She takes it so hard anyway. You and I love each other and we've got each other, those beads don't amount to anything. Let me send them back," Phillip was pleading, quietly and earnestly.

"No, They're mine," Beth said. "She's always upset. She wants everything, everything. And she won't give you a divorce. I know she wouldn't. What's the sense of our trying to make a life together if you give in to her on everything. Every week there is another letter. She wants this, and then she wants that, and she tells you to do this and don't do that. I'm going to keep the beads myself."

Phillip lit a cigarette and stood looking out the window. "You can have the damn beads," he said. "Forget about it, Beth. They are your beads." He turned around facing her.

Beth looked into his face. Her eyes sparkled. Then she smiled and put her arms around him. He kissed her and then said, "I've got the moral strength of a piece of taffy." He thought of how happy he and Beth were together. Why couldn't his wife leave him alone. She had always run his life for him and she still wanted to.

Phillip shipped off everything his wife had asked for excepting the beads. Beth wore them every day and showed them proudly to friends. She explained that they were over five thousand years old, dug from the old Toltec pyramids. It didn't matter what dress she wore, the beads were a part of the costume. Always, when wearing them, she felt a feeling of victory.

Soon another letter came from Phillip's wife. "You did not send me the beads. I want them immediately. You have changed into something not quite human. Before you met this Beth person you were a decent human being. Think of the lovely times we had together. Don't you ever think of the past and the great happiness we had with each other. To think that two people, who for years had a married life like ours, filled with such happiness, could separate because of a little trollop. She shall not have those beads. Send them to me at once Phillip or I will deluge you with telegrams. I'll say things that will make you and your sweet little thing the talk of the town. You will surely regret it if you don't send them at once. One week will be the limit of my patience. Why you simply ignored my request."

Beth was standing across the room waiting for a chance at the letter. Phillip saw her start slowly toward him with the fingers of one hand to her mouth and her eyes opened wide. "Please. Can I see it?" she asked. She moved toward Phillip.

He handed her the letter with no protest.

"She can't have the beads," Beth said. "She can't. You've told me twice they are mine. I don't know what makes me feel so mean about them, Phillip. But they mean so much more to me than just beads."

"But why, Beth? Why?" Phillip asked.

"You know yourself, Phillip, they mean more than just beads to her too. She wouldn't make such a ridiculous fuss over them if they didn't. It's like a tug of war. We have given in on everything. She is stronger and feels more secure than I do. She knows she has got power and she uses it. Even with the beads. They're just a symbol."

"Don't be silly, Beth," Phillip said. "And if she is idiotic enough to demand them, you're not going to be silly enough to refuse to send them back. Please darling."

"Phillip, please, can't you see it? You just don't understand," Beth said.

Phillip walked out of the room. He could understand his wife's making a stupid fuss, she had always done things like that. But Beth's attitude puzzled him. She had always been easy going and agreeable. Why, the whole mess of beads had cost only a couple of dollars. It was crazy the way women acted. He turned and went back to Beth.

"Look, Beth, she is just as likely as not to send those telegrams. And you know in a small town, everybody would know about it. It would just make a nice little scandal. Those old Aztecs or Toltecs must have put a hot little curse on those beads. I'd like to get them out of the house."

Then Beth walked out of the room and Phillip heard the outside door slam shut. He picked up a newspaper and tried to read. Let the telegrams come, he thought. I can't do anything about it.

Soon he noticed Beth come tiptoeing into the room, holding the beads in her hand.

"Where were you?" Phillip asked.

"Here are the beads," she said. "You decide what to do. You know the way I feel about them."

Phillip was puzzled. He got up from his chair and stood holding the beads in his hands. "We'll send them back and forget all about it," he said. "That's the best thing to do." Beth will forget all about it in a day or two, he thought. I might as well get rid of them.

He packed the beads for mailing and in the afternoon when they drove to the village for provisions, he mailed them to his wife.

He thought Beth had already forgotten them. She was unusually quiet and said nothing about the beads. For two days he noticed nothing unusual in her actions and thought that her less talkative manner was a product of his own imagination.

Three days later she went to New York on a shopping trip. Phillip was glad she was going there. It would do her good and she would come back in a happier frame of mind. He missed her terribly, even when she was away from him only a few hours. He thought there was nothing he wouldn't do to make her happy. And her trip would leave him free to help the gardener set out some overgreens before the frost set in.

The day after Beth went to the city, Phillip got a letter from her. He looked at the envelope, surprised. Why had she written? She would be back on the evening train. He turned the envelope over in his hand and then opened it.

Beth wrote, "I'm sorry Phillip but I am not coming back. I love you Phillip, but you are not free, not in any sense. We can't make a life together if no part of your life is your own."

BRIDGE NOTES

BY ELY CULBERTSON

A Demonstration Of Card Sense

THE Budapest international congress produced a deal which is a magnificent object-lesson in card sense, and reveals that mysterious quality as a mere affair of intelligent analysis. West dealt at love, and North (Vogelhofer) and South (Mrs. Sobel) bid their holdings as shown:

North: 1S. (Five honours tricks and four losers, but the hand is too weak and balanced for any more aggressive opening).
South: 2NT. (No biddable suit, nine losers, but just enough honour tricks to justify a game attempt).
North: 3D. (There should be a slam here, but we will not risk 3NT until I have been reassured about hearts. A lead through my K of hearts might be catastrophic).
South: 3S. (Proclaims no extra values, but merely indicates a preference).
North: 4NT. (I now know that we have seven and a half honour tricks, something a fit in spades, and as South obviously has only 3S and no biddable suit, she must have 10 cards in the other three suits, so that a slam looks worth a mild gamble. Let me see if she has the other two aces? This bid is, of course, the Culbertson convention, showing two aces and either the spade or diamond king).
South: 5NT. (The compulsory response under the Culbertson 4-5NT convention).
North: 6NT. (I prefer this bid to 6S, being definitely aware that I and my partner have only seven spades between us. It is true that slams in NT are usually awkward without the aid of a long and solid suit, but I now know that we hold all the aces and all the kings, plus at least two seven-card suits, each headed by A, K, Q, with with the chance of eight diamonds).

West led the knave of spades, and Mrs. Sobel, as South, made a long pause to consider the situation and its possibilities. She can see immediately no more than ten sure tricks—namely, three in spades, two in clubs, three in diamonds, and two in hearts, so that she has to develop two more tricks for her contract. The simpler opportunities obviously consist of establishing a thirteenth club and a thirteenth spade, which would assure 6NT if the two black suits both split 3-3. Which suit shall she explore first? West's lead of the knave of spades is an extremely disconcerting card. It may be one of five possibilities—namely, (1) top of a five-card sequence to J, 10, 9; (2) top of a four-card sequence to J, 10, 9; (3) top of a three-card sequence to J, 10, 9, devised to penetrate a tenace in North, after South's tardy preference for spades over diamonds; (4) top of a doubleton, intended to set up a fourth-round spade in East; (5) a singleton. The odds are that it is top of four or five card sequence, or a doubleton. In that event a 3-3 break in clubs is the first probability to be explored. So, trick 1 is taken by North's queen, and the clubs are explored. How would my readers "explore" clubs? Note that Mrs. Sobel led the ace followed by a small card. By this method of handling the suit she obtains the information furnished by two rounds of the suit; she retains control of it as a safeguard against a really bad distribution; and, most important of all, she sacrifices the only trick which she can afford to lose early in the proceedings. Novices do not readily grasp the effect of parting with the inevitable loser early, but it often lays the foundations of a squeeze, both by revealing distribution and by cluttering up the enemy hands with precious stoppers—not to mention the chance of a blind lead which may solve the declarer's problems.

West naturally takes this third trick with the club queen, and, seeing nothing better to do, returns the spade 10. The ace of spades holds this fourth trick, and Mrs. Sobel, with an anxious heart, tries out her luck in clubs. They break 3-3, and the eleventh trick at least is now assured. Mrs. Sobel next wonders if spades are going to be equally kind, and plays the spade king, on which West discards a heart. That twelfth trick has still to be sought. The situation is now fast clearing up. West originally held two spades and three clubs, and has discarded two hearts. Ergo, West has his eye cocked on North's four diamonds, and is tenaciously clinging to a diamond stopper, leaving East to guard both spades and hearts. Now East originally held four spades to the nine, three clubs to the ten, and . . . let us see . . . three diamonds, since Mrs. Sobel can plainly count four in West, and N-S have six. On the thirteenth club East discards a diamond. Therefore his remaining cards are:

H.: J, x, x.
D.: x, x.

for the played tricks number three spades and four clubs. Evidently if the three top diamonds are played out, East will be reduced to three cards, namely:

(1) S.: 9, or (2) H.: J, x, x.
H.: J, x.

South must have clapped a pair of imaginary hands, for the squeeze is now well and truly laid. If East discards his spade at the tenth trick, North's last spade will make. If on the other hand East throws a heart, South promptly cashes ace, king, and a little heart. Novices who have never applied a simple squeeze can study its elements on this deal. It depends on

(a) Retaining communication between declarer and dummy for the eleventh trick. (On this deal the necessary communications are provided by the top hearts.)

Benighted Baker

(The prohibiting of night baking has been on the see-saw in the House of Lords; Lord Farington's clause in the Factories Bill was rejected pending a "more thorough investigation.")

Baker, Baker, fall o' night!
Get you up by candle-light,
To bake the loaves both brown and white.
By breakfast-time in the morning.
Knead the rye and barley-bread,
The flour so white from the wheat so red,
Work while the stars shine overhead.
Till breakfast-time in the morning.

Let the meal be half or whole,
Let the shape be crescent or roll,
There must be bread for every soul.
At breakfast-time in the morning.
Cottage loaf with the double chin,
Sandwich loaf, Vienna, tin,
Bake away till the moon goes in.
At breakfast-time in the morning.

Sleep by light and live by dark,
In place of the sun the oven-spark,
Up with the owl, to bed with the lark,
At breakfast-time in the morning.

For some the grain, for others the chaff;
Bread! Bread! life's own staff
May be the Baker's epitaph
Some breakfast-time in the morning.

TOMFOOL

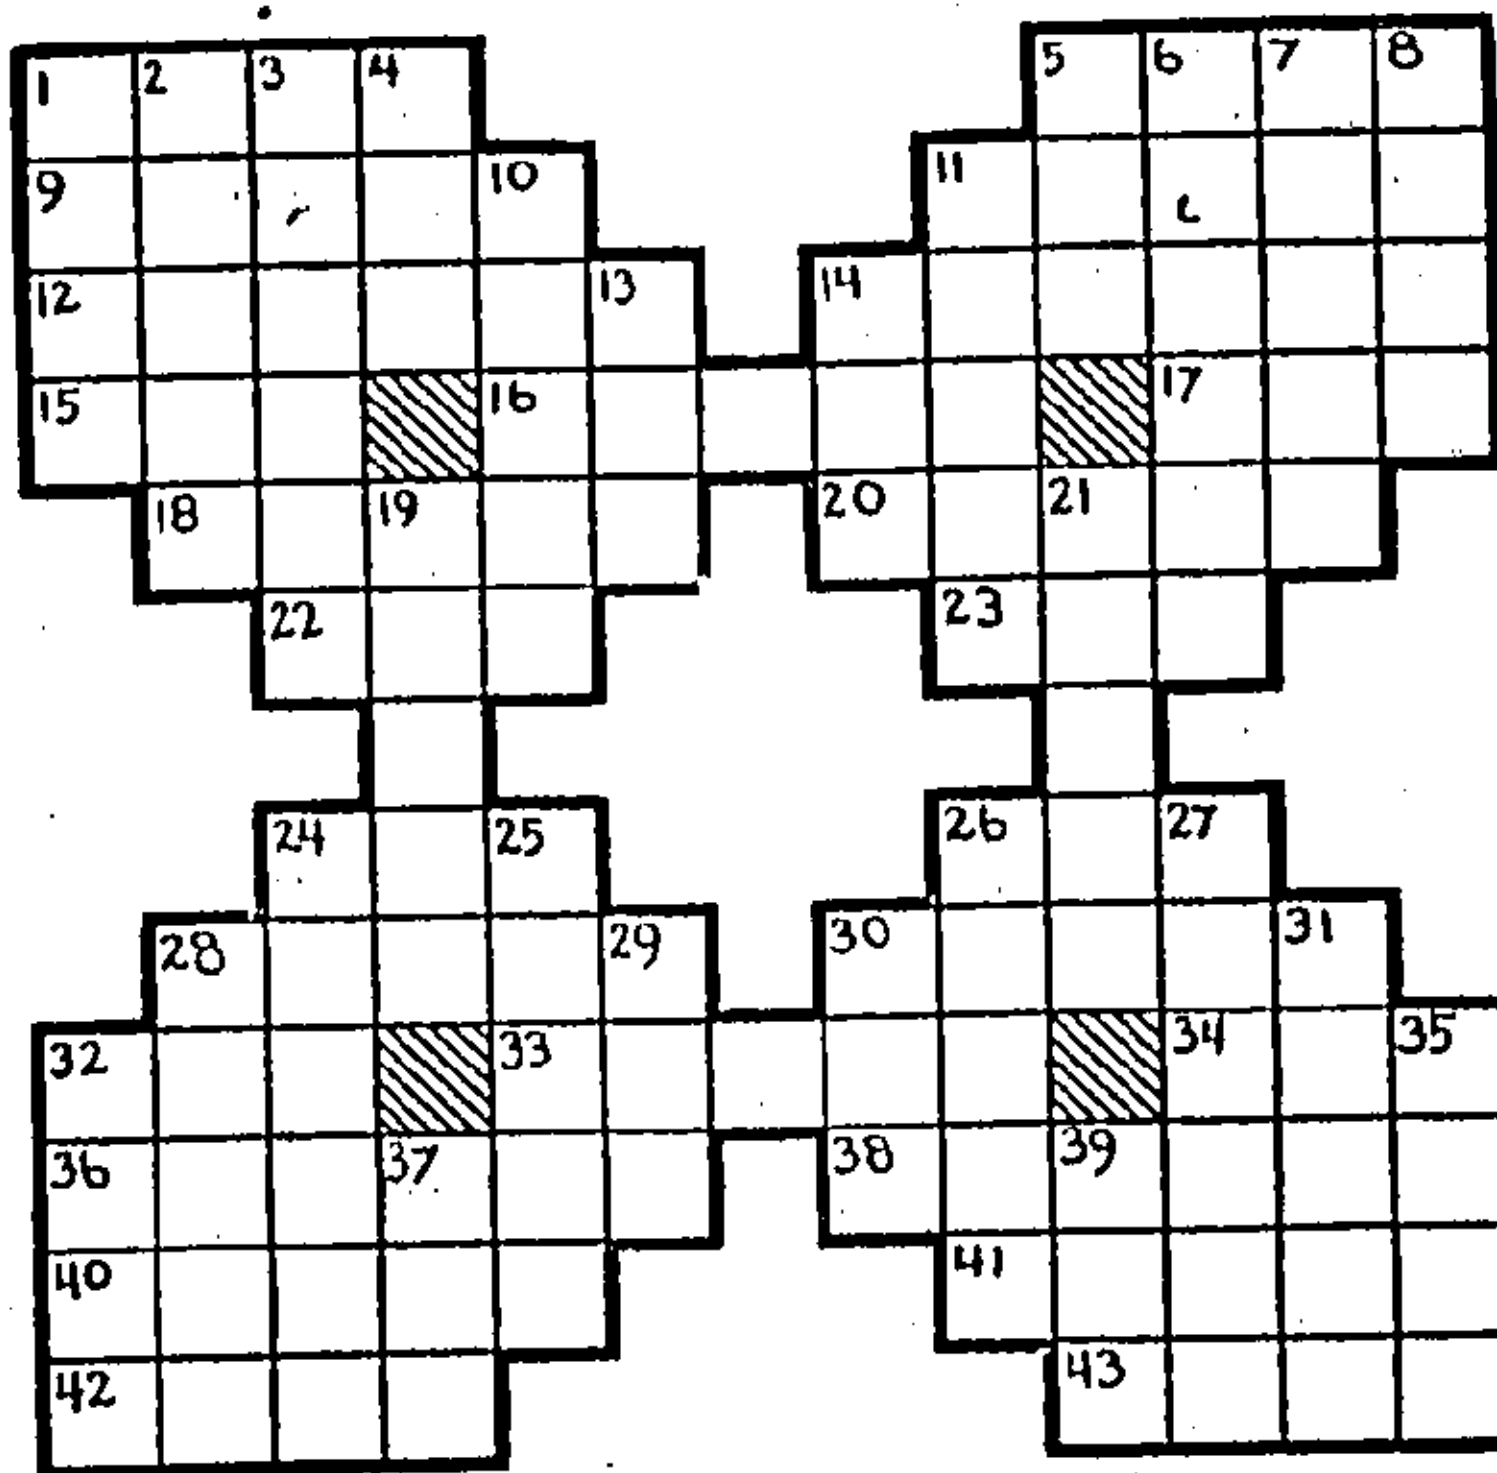

(b) Identifying one opponent with stoppers in two suits. (Sometimes two cards in each suit—i.e., a second-round stopper in each suit, —sometimes the master card in one suit and a third-round stopper in the other suit, as here.)

(c) Making him discard one of his four vital cards at the tenth trick, after which he is reduced to three cards.

A novice or "family" player, defending against a player of Mrs. Sobel's calibre, is apt to exclaim, "How uncanny!" or to prate about "card sense" or " flair," as if a few heaven-born card players possessed a sixth sense analogous to second sight. In actual fact, card sense consists exclusively of rigid intellectual inferences; and this hand has been analysed at length to indicate how such inferences can lead, irresistibly and relentlessly, to the opposition being pinned helplessly down.
